

IN MEMORIAM

MR. DANIEL MALONE

The death of Daniel Malone of Douglas Street, occurred at his home on Sunday evening, August 16, after a brief illness. The late Mr. Malone was in his 70th year, was born in Green Bay, Wis., where he successfully operated a farm until moving to this city some 25 years ago.

Since that time he had been employed with the H. R. Large Coal Company until forced to retire four years ago due to a chronic rheumatism, which left him more or less crippled. He was able to get around until about two weeks previous to his death, and until that time his family and many friends had every hope that they would have his fatherly guidance and congenial companionship for quite some time to come. However, about two weeks previous to his death he took a turn for the worse, and in spite of skilful medical attention he passed away peacefully fortified and anointed in the arms of the Holy Catholic Church of which he was ever a faithful member.

The late Mr. Malone was of a genial and congenial disposition. His work brought him into contact with a wide variety of people. He was a well-known, well-liked, and was consequently admired and respected by all who knew him. He had a special love for the little children and could often be seen giving them rides as he went to and from work. "Suffer the little ones to come unto me," seemed to be one of the Christ-like mottoes of his life.

Of a kind and charitable nature, he spoke no ill of any man, and would go out of his way to help anyone whom he knew to be in need, or in need. That he will be greatly missed within his own family circle is surely true, but his passing will be mourned by a host of neighbours and friends as well.

Besides his widow, the former Teresa Flood of Kelly's Cross, whom he married 45 years ago, there are the following sons and daughters: Stephen and Leo both of whom reside in Charlottetown; Ursula, (Mrs. Aeneas Coady); Mary, (Mrs. Leo MacIntyre); and Florence and Teresa at home. Two daughters Ellen and Annie predeceased him several years ago.

The funeral, which was largely attended, was held in the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer on August 17. The Requiem High Mass was sung by Rev. Fr. Maddigan C.S.S.R. with three grandsons, Peter and Ray McGonnell and Roy Malone, serving.

Present in the sanctuary besides the celebrant of the Mass were Rev. Fr. Murray of Tyson, Rev. Fr. Murray of St. Bernierfield and Rev. Lorne MacDonald O.M.S. home from Ottawa.

The pallbearers were: Messrs. F. Flood, Albert McRae, Albert Murphy, Leo Carragher, Earnest Collier and Tommy Carragher. Interment was in the Catholic Cemetery May he rest in peace Amen.

Statistics of the last 40 years show that potato consumption is down 55 per cent. This is a strange trend in taste of the food consuming public, especially in view of the comparative cheapness of the nutritious and nearly perfect food ingredients furnished by the potato. In fact one authority avers that its cheapness makes people averse to its use. Your humble scribe does not coincide in toto with that theory.

It took quite a long time for the British people to acquire a taste for the potato.

It was originally taken from Chile and Peru to Carolina, crossed with another wild plant by some "mexical" "Burbank" of Spanish or Italian descent and introduced into Spain and Italy, before it was taken to Sir Walter Raleigh's estate in Ireland about 1586. It didn't become a regular article of diet in the British Isles till about the middle 1700's.

The drop in the use of potatoes per capita is likely due to several causes—not the least of which is the young generation not acquiring a taste for the satisfying and nourishing food. There is such a militant advertising campaign for the use of new fangled, homogenized and vitaminized foods, tantalizing the gustatory senses. The lonely spud is left to speak for itself, minus glamorous and high pressure advertising.

The writer had to get along without potatoes for three months several years ago, and it took a week to get to like them again. From that he deduces that a taste must be "acquired." Hence also the slowness of British people to adopt the potato as a staple diet.

Sometimes one is inclined to wonder how the people of former generations, even in the middle ages, grew and flourished, and lived to astounding old ages. They were almost totally oblivious of calories and vitamins, yet they performed Herculean feats of physical and mental strength. Angus McAskill put a two thousand pound anchor on his shoulder about one hundred years ago. Louis Seers, the great French Canadian strong man lifted considerably more than a ton over 50 years ago. Lord MacAulay recited the whole 1400 lines of Paradise Lost on a trip across the Irish Sea. History is full of remarkable feats of body and mind performed in a moment and medieval times.

The inventors of the present day have the advantage of basic work of predecessors. They improve on the technique of the originals.

The orange growers of California put on a heavy advertising campaign some years ago to make the people conscious of the health value of citrus fruits. They succeeded well in making the populace fruit conscious. It paid off big. General health and longevity has improved. The greater per capita consumption of fruit and fruit juices is one of the main causes of improvement. It is even possible that if people ate more fruit and drank more buttermilk, the desire for spirituous liquors would decrease in the inverse ratio.

Potato is the ideal natural diet concomitant of meat and fish. They seem to make a nearly perfect complement for one another, and must be rich in vitamins and calories and all that it takes to

FLY ITALIANS HERE

MILAN (AP)—The last group of 61 Italian emigrants to Canada left Monday by the Milan - Montreal "air bridge" to meet a Sept. 7 deadline. The "air bridge" with four-engined planes carrying 61 emigrants at a time, was organized by Italian authorities two weeks ago to get the last several hundred of 1,636 farm emigrants to Canada by the date fixed.

The writer cannot speak specifically in the chemical constituents of the potato, but feels sure that it has a high medicinal value, especially as an antiscorbutic. It will neutralize scurvy fronts.

In the Dawson City mining camp in the winter of 1898-99, scurvy became rampant, on account of there being no potatoes or other fresh vegetables. The first relief of the stricken miners was from two sacks of potatoes, brought in "over the ice" (Winter trail), which were rationed at one per person for a dollar each. With the advent of more potatoes the scurvy scourge vanished. Most of the miners ate them raw. It is quite likely that the anti-scorbutic properties are greater in the raw state.

In the 1880's, a dory came ashore at Scatar (Skat-aree) C. B. Three men barely alive, were found in the boat. They were carried to a house, and were given a slice of boiled potato every half hour for the first day. In a few days of careful nurture they were restored to natural health and strength. In their emaciated condition, the giving of food was a delicate proposition. Small amounts and the most easily digested and assimilated was required and the potato was ideal.

Those simple Cape Breton people had practical common sense and judgement.

Now! is the accepted hour for organization and advertisement.

RCN To Tackle Navigation Of North-West Passage

The final link in the Northwest passage—the water route from Europe to Cathay (dotted line) sought by explorers since the voyage of Columbus—has been broken by two U. S. ice-breakers, the navy's Burton Island and the coast guard's Northwind. They left San Diego early in July (solid black line) and pushed their way through ice-locked McClure Strait, western entrance to the East-West passage, into the Arctic seas where, as a joint U. S.-Canadian expedition, they made investigations of the Beaufort Sea and McClure Strait areas. Meanwhile, the Royal Canadian Navy has announced it is making a bid to navigate the North-West passage. If the HMCS Labrador, the navy's Arctic patrol ship, completes the trip to the Pacific, it will be the first naval vessel to navigate the passage.
