WILL BE CLOSE

Pre-voting assessments indicated the 9,000,000-member Congress will support Wilson by a narrow majority. His speech Monday was interrupted a half-dozen times by mild heckling and polite applause.

In any case, Wilson told the unions, the serious economic problems will be settled "not by a card vote" at the Congress, but by government decision.

"There will be no letting up in the severity of our economic measures until we are paying our way," Wilson said.

"That means the government must govern."

He emphasized the government's determination to relate pay to work accomplished even after the temporary wages freeze.

"We do not seek as a long-term policy to destroy the machinery of collective bargaining."

but after the six-months standstill and the six months of severe restraint in the long term it will still be necessary to ensure that the planned expansion of incomes is related to the increases in national productivity and does not attempt to go beyond it.

The prime minister attacked restrictive practices such as over-manning at union insistence, outmoded systems of recruitment and apprenticeship in skilled crafts and inter-union disputes over job demarcation.

The unions, he said, must shed "ingrained" traditions inherited from a defensive past— "we cannot fight the problems of tomorrow with the rusty weapons of the past."

comes, dividends and prices— could be mass unemployment in a depression such as we have never seen," he said.

Demanding an end to "scandalous" restrictive practices among unions and entrenched systems that amount to "laying claim to a full day's pay for less than a full day's work," Wilson said:

"We are in danger of turning inwards on ourselves in pursuit of a leisure we have not earned, of being debased by the philosophy of the never-had-it-so-good society, which withholds the resources needed to care for others in our midst who have never had it good at all."

Wilson's 45-minute speech to the main base of the Labor government's political support was a prelude to TUC voting Wednesday on the wage-restraint policy. The government would invoke statutory power to freeze incomes, dividends and prices under legislation passed last month if voluntary efforts showed signs of failing to maintain the freeze for six months.
