MARY HAWORTH

Office Do-Gooders Crow As Boss Mends His Ways

Dear Mary Haworth: You recently published our letter about our married boss and his church working style friend.

Well, now we thank you, because since your commentary appeared in the paper, he now goes home at 4:30 like other men.

No more walking through the square with her in her boss' room (she could take the bus in front of our building if she chose).

No more strolls in the room between 4:30 and 5 p.m.; no more strolls around a town on their lunch hour; no more dates a couple of evenings a week when she would take her car and meet him in the country until 6 or 6:30 p.m.

It seems he has seen the light and we sincerely hope that he keeps his sense, his job, his nice wife and lovely children. We also hope his friends didn't get hurt too much.

Even the office brass has noticed the change and they are pleased, as we are. So you see your column does good. We know you get criticized for someone of your advice, but in this case a group of readers intends to thank your efforts.

We blame the modern home in many cases, also the sordid books and movies our youth is exposed to, and the self-indulgent spirit of other married men in playing around for some of the mistakes that working girls make. Sincerely, A. H. Bent A.R.: Isn't there something in Holy Writ to the effect that there is slight hope of salvation for the individual who cannot control his tongue?

I can't feel happy about your message of thanks, although, because I think I discern an understanding of our situation, I am sure you feel you were effected, as if the village gossip were circulating based on an account of a triumph of spirituality.

One might have occasion to feel humbly grateful for the privacy of one's soul, if one has been magnanimously, compassionately instructed by a successful associate from potentially disastrous mis-conduct.

But if one's rescue operation successfully concluded (to all appearances), were animated wholly by a spirit of good will and responsible concern for the welfare of the persons in peril, I hardly think one would offer for publication (and general circulation) afterward, an itemized list of past indiscretions prescribed by the "saved." (As you note here.)

I understand it is an axiom of theology that persons who seem somehow immune to the temptations (or sins) of the flesh, are on the other hand peculiarly susceptible to the comparatively few grave sins of the spirit, such as, for example, envy, jealousy, cruelty, malice, selfishness, and the like.

In the course of your clean-up campaign it might be advisable to look to yourselves, to see if perchance you do-gooders need to weed out of your own personalities and social relations certain sins of the spirit that are a menace to your moral character.

Dear Mary Haworth: Please settle an argument I am proper for a lady living alone (or with a roommate) to let her date call for and deliver her at the door of her apartment? Or should she greet her date and say goodnight to him in the lobby or vestibule of her apartment building?

M.H. I understand it is an axiom of theology that persons who seem somehow immune to the temptations (or sins) of the flesh, are on the other hand peculiarly susceptible to the comparatively few grave sins of the spirit, such as, for example, envy, jealousy, cruelty, malice, selfishness, and the like.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Cow-Kind Year Now For Sun And Showers

"This week" the younger farmer remarked, having come to the end of the week of his morning "should take some of the cattle off to the grass." No kidding, but we fancy, the cow-kind are yearning now to come to the end of the week of the long spell of stabling, and out to sunlight and showers. True, a little company of these has been moved to other barns, but the weather, which allows them the freedom of pasture and access to the stream, is just what they need.

Presently however, the pastures alone will supply away from your reach. At the time he is absorbing, learning without effort on his part, and naturally, the ways of the farming, already finding a useful place with the rest.

"Ask Peter. He will know" says young eyes are sharply turned to young memories fairly sure.

When will the cultivating this year, so that by this, about half the flock has already been shorn and gone to permanent pasture at the other farm.

Peter shadows the farmers on days like this, so lowly. He watches at the shearing, helps at the stables' cleaning, and the fencing; watches with ever expectant eyes in the near pasture, looks in on piglets, the piglets, laughs when, startled, they scamper roughly away from your reach. At the time he is absorbing, learning without effort on his part, and naturally, the ways of the farming, already finding a useful place with the rest.

"Ask Peter. He will know" says young eyes are sharply turned to young memories fairly sure.
