1,200,000 Railway Men Ordered to Strike Next Saturday

CHICAGO, June 28.—The strike of 1,200,000 union railroad employees started for certain today as the policy comimttee of the shop crafts met here to canvass the strike vote.

The strike call will be sent Thursday ordering them to walk out Saturday according to latest information.

Crisis in British Independent Labor Party

LONDON, June 28.—Today was a critical day in the history of British labor, for the annual convention of the British Labor Party, which opened in Edinburgh this morning will see the issue joined between the Constitutionalists and the Communists. When the delegates gathered they found that a motion was on the Agenda paper urging the Labor Party to accept affiliation with the Communists. It is known that this motion will meet the vigorous and uncompromising antagonism of the executive of the party because the Communists have made no secret of their desire to embark on other than strictly lawful courses. This, of course, is contrary to the principles on which the Labor Party was founded and which it has followed during the whole span of its existence. Moreover, the Communists hardly conceal their aims to wreck the Labor Party, and the discussion is bound to be both violent, and a curious motion is down for discussion tomorrow evening when a resolution will be brought forward condemning the leaders of the Labor Party for their association with Free Masonry and demanding their withdrawal from that body.

Tolstoy Predicts Russian Revolution

SHERBROOKE, Que., June 28.—A revolution, which will overthrow the present administration in Russia was predicted by Count Ilya Tolstoy, son of the famous Russian writer, in an address before the National Federation of Women's Clubs here. Tolstoy said the revolution will follow the inevitable failure of the Economic Conference at the Hague. Neglect of the present administration to pay soldiers and government employees will cause an uprising which will bring about the downfall of the Soviet regime, Toltstoy asserted.

Nova Scotia Farmers In Convention

TRURO, N. S., June 28.—The second annual convention of the United Farmers of Nova Scotia opened here this afternoon to continue for two days. President H. L. Taggart, M. L. A. for Colchester presided. Among the speakers was J. J. Morrison, Secretary of the United Farmers of Ontario. Mr. Morrison has returned from New Glasgow where he addressed the Pictou County United Farmers last night. His subject at the morning session here was Organization, and in the afternoon he spoke on the Eastern Council of Agriculture which is now in progress of organization. So far as is known no political action would be taken by this convention.

Russia Wins First Round at Hague

THE HAGUE, June 28.—Russia today won the opening clash of the Hague Conference over the heads of French protest. The Soviet delegation carried its point that credits for Rusisa must be the first thing discussed at the parley and the sub committee on credits was to meet with the Bolshevik delegation at four o'clock this afternoon.

The French showed great resentment at the first preliminary meeting of delegates at what they termed the Russian's dictatorial attitude. They declared they would not discuss credits until Litvinoff head of the Soviet emassiaries, announced his readiness to agree to Allied demands regarding debts and private property. Litvinoff remained firm. The French tried to bring about a meeting of the Debts Sub-Commission. The Russians refused to attend. Finally it was agreed, as Litvinoff had demanded, that first contact should be established through the Credits Sub-Commission.

Airmen Detained At Marseilles

PARIS, June 28.— Major Blak and party who are attempting a flight around the world in place of the late Sir Ross Smith, are still detained at Marseilles, awaiting new machine parts before commencing their long flight over the Mediterranean.

The replacements have arrived at Lyons and are being transported by air. Major Blake is expected to resume the round the world flight in a few days.

Caldwell and Dr. Baxter are Near to Blows

OTTAWA, June 28.— Two members from New Brunswick, Hon. J. B. M. Baxter and T. W. Caldwell almost came to blows shortly after midnight. The quarrel arose over statements made previously in the House by both members in regard to the creation of new polls in Mr. Caldwell's riding. Mr. Caldwell brought up the matter on the orders of the day, and Mr. Baxter replying angrily, resented that Mr. Caldwell had charged him with having made a false statement. Mr. Caldwell, he added, had neither sufficient respect for the amenities of public life, nor the dignity of Parliament to withdraw. Mr. Caldwell denied that he had charged Mr. Baxter with making a false statement. Mr. Baxter held to his words and sharply added: "His statement would have been resented in a much more violent manner by myself if it had been made outside the walls of this chamber."

Move to Lobby.

Mr. Baxter immediately rose from his seat and made for the Opposition lobby. After a moment or two, Mr. Caldwell also rose and, amid considerable excitement, followed Mr. Baxter. There was a rush of members into the lobby where the two men could be heard in a sharp altercation. Then the Speaker took a hand in the quarrel. "I would ask the sergeant-at-arms," he said, "to see that no disorder takes place in the lobbies."

Members Intervened.

A moment or so and the House was almost empty. Members hurried into the lobby after the sergeant-at-arms. From the entrance —the lobbies are strictly reserved to members—Mr. Caldwell could be heard declaring again that he had not accused Mr. Baxter of making a false statement, that what he had said was that a document read by Mr. Baxter contained a false statement. "I won't take any apology from you," shouted Mr. Baxter as Mr. Caldwell was insisting on his point. If you want to make an apology, make it in the House of Commons." The quarrel was rapidly approaching a violent stage when members intervened.

The two men were eventually persuaded to leave the corridor and return to the House.

Germans Honor Rathenau's Memory

BERLIN, June 28—Germany was faced today with the critical aftermath of the murder of Walter Rathenau. A general strike was declared in Berlin on the occasion of the late Foreign Minister's funeral and trains throughout the country stopped their wheels for minutes at noon in honor of Rathenau's memory.

Communists and Socialists held great meetings in the larger cities closely watched by the police and troops who were called out in full force to prevent possible disorders. It was learned that further and more serious demonstrations are planned for tomorrow both by Communists and Royalists, and the occasion of the anniversary of the signing of the Versailles treaty. The government, struggling to preserve order, has demanded that pan-German meetings be abandoned. It is generally feared that if Royalists are permitted to gather in large numbers a breach against the Republic may develop.

BERLIN, June 27—Official announcement has been made that Chancellor Wirth temporarily had taken over the portfolio of Foreign Minister made vacant through the assassination of Dr. Rathenau.

Irish Elections Returns Completed

DUBLIN, June 28.— After eight days the tellers have completed the count of the election of a Provisional Parliament.

The results are Fro-treaty fifty eight, Anti- treaty with ninety one for it and thirty six against it. The voters are divided with 696, 261 for it and 119,507 against it. While labor is pro-treaty yet it disapproves of the draft of the constitution the adoption of which is the most important task of the provisional parliament, a statement of labors criticism is expected soon.

The opposition also includes a few other treatites as well as Republicans. Some of the former dislike the form of the oaths and are convinced that the Governor General and Privy Council have too much power.

High Com'r Larkin Will Not Resign

LONDON, June 28.— Mr. Larkin says the rumor that he may resign as Canadian High Commissioner is preposterous. An Ottawa despatch reported that Mr. Larkin had intimated to the Premier that he would resign the High Commissionership within the next few months as he was out of sympathy with the immigration policy of the Dominion Government.

A RETURN.

Chapter 78.

The Paris days grew more and more hectic.

Gloria had more friends here than in London, and more demands upon her time as a result.

"I feel as though we were home again, with these afternoon tea parties happening," Pan remarked happily when Gloria came in one day and announced that several visitors would shortly appear.

"Tea isn't the ceremony here it is in England, or the sort of thing I make of it at home," Gloria explained, slipping out of her suit and hunting for a cool and appropriate gown. "The French idea is that it spoils dinner, and they build up their day to a proper appreciation of the meal."

"But I can't take food so seriously, Pan, if you tell Madame Rollande I asked it, she'll send you a huge white cloth to cover some of the gilt of that table. The darling gives me her best, but her best means too many curlicues.

Pan did as she was asked, put out of sight most of the ornaments and a green plush cover that gave Gloria a headache, and even managed to go into the kitchen and make the tea—for the hotel was small and Madame adored her American guest.

And Gloria was almost hysterically gay at her party, as she poured tea and dispensed little cakes, showed off Frankie and introduced Pan as her protegee.

"Though whether I look after her or she looks after me I can't say," Glaria said. "Donald look at the fine shape of her head. Wouldn't you like to model that?" A caressing hand touched Pan's hair lightly. Pan smiled, used to being discussed in the third person. Donald was a sculptor studying in Paris; there was an elderly lady who was addressed as duchess, and who spoke only French, a middle-aged journalist, an English friend who happened to be staying in Paris, an Italian who spoke any language, George standing to one side at home with everyone and Gloria a gay centre of an odd group.

"How strange that I should be here Pan said after they had gone. "I don't belong here, but they don't know that. They were nice to me because you put me here. They didn't know I came from Norris City and am nobody at all."

"Don't go back to your feeling of inferiority," Gloria warned. She looked ten years older suddenly, the gaiety had gone with the last guest.

"No, I'm not. I was only thinking—none of these friends of yours would bother with me, except that I live with you and am your friend. There is nothing in me to attract—"

"My type attracts some people, yours others," Gloria answered practically. "I have dash and initiative, perhaps, you have an enduring sweetness." Silence then.

"I should lecture you about feeling inferior, I feel it myself at times—now, for instance. These people you admire so—that French duchess is a hard and unscrupulous as a woman can be, she comes because I amuse her. The rest come to meet her, she's a big social light, I don't care a snap about any of them—anything—"

This was childish for Gloria! Pan sat and felt miserable.

"If only you'd cabled Santley before you sailed," she said finally "It would have been all right then. He didn't hear and went out of town and then didn't get your wire when we landed."

"Do you think a cable would have made a difference?" Gloria asked. "No, it's plain enough. He may not be interested in this other girl, but he certainly got over his fancy for me. He may only have been in love because he couldn't marry me, and because he was sorry for me.

"There's nothing to be sorry for now. I'm free. I've a business that makes me independent. I'm settled where I've lots of friends. And think of the time—it's been years—"

"Not so many if he really cared," Pan argued. "Didn't he write so you could tell how he felt?"

"Oh yes, of course. And said he was going to follow me to New York. But his future was in London, I knew that—and I couldn't go back with Frank living there. And I couldn't let him waste his time over a married woman. So I made his stay away and made him write just friendly letters. They were always affectionate, good Lord, I've lived on those letters for years—"

"I wish you would marry," Pan said. "You may like your independence but you are killing yourself the way you live now, you work too much and you play too much."

"If I didn't work I'd die of starvation and if I didn't play I'd die of boredom." Gloria answered. "I don't want to marry, not even a Santley." Pan knew better than this. "We're going back to London Friday, and we'll be there several weeks before we go home. Santley will likly appear, and I'll be nice and friendly so he'll know that I haven't had any but impersonal ideas about him for years."

She began to dress for dinner. Pan looked at the thin, nervous face, white against the rose of her dress, and guessed the agony of mind that made her mouth set so tightly. She wished she could do something. She felt she would be glad if only Gloria would marry Georgeg, her own feelings would not matter. But perhaps Santley would come, and perhaps it would be different in London.
