Almond, whose 10th Corps is spread over 23,000 square miles in the northeast, and Lt.-Gen. Walton H. Walker, whose Eighth Army five days ago opened an ill-fated "end-the-war offensive" in the northwest.

A New War

Before their arrival MacArthur bluntly acknowledged that his United Nations command in Korea is confronted with "an entirely new war," as the result of full-scale Chinese intervention.

In an extraordinary communication, MacArthur said: "This situation, repugnant as it may be, poses issues which must find their solution within the councils of the United Nations, and the chancelleries of the world."

This was interpreted to mean that if the Chinese cannot be stopped by political pressure, the United Nations forces should be authorized to unleash their air arm against Red Manchuria where perhaps 300,000 Chinese reserves are massed.

At present Allied planes are forbidden to cross the Manchurian and Siberian frontiers on bombing missions.

Front-line dispatches from the northwest front Tuesday said two "unidentified" four-engine planes and three Russian-built jets were observed over the American occupied border town of Hyesanjin.

It was the first mention of four-engine planes since early in the five months old Korean war.

The northwest battle-front blazed with heavy fighting along the entire 75-mile line.

Aerial observers reported the Yalu River has frozen solid, permitting untold numbers of Chinese reserves to cross over the ice. Allied bombers had smashed the main bridges.

Reds Swarming Everywhere

A U.S. 1st Corps spokesman said air reports indicated that Chinese Reds were swarming along "every road, every gully and every ridge-line" for a distance of 36 miles north of Tokchon.

The fall of Tokchon collapsed the right wing of the Eighth Army line. It permitted Reds to sweep on south almost to Pukchang, 12 miles southeast of Tokchon and only five miles north of the Allied supply base of Suncheon.

U.S. 1st Cavalry troops are holding Suncheon, which is 27 miles north of the former Communist capital of Pyongyang.

The 1st Corps spokesman said if Chinese troops continue to push along their present line of advance they will threaten to cut the main supply line from Pyongyang to the Chongchon River front.

It is west of the Chongchon River that the U.S. 24th, 25th and 2nd Divisions are falling back slowly from overwhelming pressure. The 1st Cavalry also would be threatened with entrapment.

The U.S. positions were further imperilled when the Republic of Korea (Rok) 1st Division, holding a section of the northwest front between the U.S. 24th on their left and the U.S. 25th on their right, suddenly gave way Tuesday morning.

It was a "critical turn," reported AP correspondent Don Whitehead. The ROK 1st had been regarded as one of the best South Korean lar manner conducted by the retiring president, Mrs. Cameron. The minutes of the last regular meeting and the last annual meeting were read and approved. Several sick calls were reported, and the retiring secretary, Mrs. Claude Dewar, gave the financial report. The members were asked to have Red Cross Work handed in at the next meeting.

divisions. One officer who had been with the division called its retreat "a collapse." This fall-back laid bare the left flank of the hard-pressed U.S. 25th Division south of Unsan at the very centre of the front.

Three Chinese divisions attacked the 25th. One regiment on the exposed flank managed to get its heavy equipment out to safety. An artillery battalion pulled back its guns through the road junction of Yungsan before the Reds could cut the escape route.

A similar situation developed on the right of the U.S. 2nd Division. There the Rok 7th Division gave way, exposing the Americans to vicious flank assaults.

The 2nd Division fell back 15 miles to positions near Won, which is about 15 miles southeast of Unsan on the 25th sector. The 2nd Division had jumped off near Won last Friday when the United Nations offensive began.

On the western end of the front, the U.S. 24th Division pulled back closer to the Chongchon River under enemy frontal attack.

On the northeast front, U.S. marines were under attack Tuesday in a sleet storm northwest of Changjin reservoir.

There were no late reports on the developments, a 10th Corps spokesman said Tuesday night. Chinese roadblocks were set up along the main supply line for the marines south of Yudam, but the marines cleared them before nightfall.

Seven Chinese Divisions General Almond, en route to Tokyo, disclosed that there were seven Chinese Red divisions fighting in the northeast sector. Previously only two Chinese Communist divisions were identified in this area.

At one time the Reds cut the supply road in five places north of the division base at Hagaru. The base is at the southern tip of frozen Changjin reservoir — an all-weather power supply point for Manchuria as well as Korea.

The marines and U.S. 7th Division troops who switched over from the vicinity of the Manchurian border, had been attacking west and northwest toward the right flank of Chinese divisions bursting through the Eighth Army.

Almond said he was not alarmed over the 10th Corps situation. On the extreme northeast end of the U.N. line the Rok Capital Division made the only advance of the day for U.N. troops. They gained two miles in a drive toward the Siberian frontier after recovering one and one half miles lost Monday when unexpected Red forces appeared north of Chongjin.

The Reds were blasted by gunfire from the U.S. heavy cruiser St. Paul and marine Corsair planes. U.S. B-29s and fighter bombers threw heavy "full-weight" strikes Tuesday against the enemy on the northwest front.

More than 2,500 incendiary bombs were dropped on the Chinese supply base at Taechon, while six other supply routes were under heavy attack.

Large numbers of Reds were believed killed by rockets and strafing runs. There were 294 sorties by fighter-bombers in the Taechon, Tokchon sector, and 176 were in direct support of ground forces.

BRUDENELL W. I. Mrs. William Dewar was elected President of the Brudenell Womens Institute at their annual meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. Thomas Cameron.

The meeting opened in the regular manner conducted by the retiring president, Mrs. Cameron. The minutes of the last regular meeting and the last annual meeting were read and approved.

open. I have thought of resigning, but I decided that probably would be admitting that she has reason to be jealous. Also, I cannot afford to give up my position. How can I cope with this unpleasant situation?

ANSWER: You can't. You can no more reason with a jealous person than you can with an insane one, and the fact that you and the man are both entirely innocent of any wrongdoing cuts no figure in the case.

Jealousy feeds on its own imaginations and suspicions. It manufactures its own evidence and can see what it wants to see. Against this distorted mind neither innocence nor arguments can prevail.

So, for your own sake, look about and see if you cannot find another position, because there is no trick so mean and low that a jealous woman will not play it. Before you know it she will begin putting her jealous fancies into words and weeping out her suspicion on you on the breasts of her intimate friends. Then your character will be besmirched forever.

DEAR MISS DIX: Do you think a philanderer ever changes? I am engaged to a man who is a born philanderer. He says he can't help flirting, but that after we are married he will never go anywhere without me and that will keep him fair to me. I am deeply in love with this man, but I am sure he will make me very unhappy. He doesn't know what loyalty is. How can I break away from this man who isn't fit to look at any decent woman?

ANSWER: If you haven't the will power to do so yourself, get some kind friend to have you locked up in a padded cell until your fit of madness is over. For believe me, there is no way of breaking a philanderer from philandering. And there is no woman more miserable than the one who is married to a man she can't trust outside of her sight and who keeps her heart torn to tatters with jealousy.
