It is often difficult to convince people their blood is impure, until dreadful carbuncles, abscesses, boils, scrofula or salt rheum, are painful proof of the fact. It is wisdom now, or whenever there is any indication of

"I had a dreadful carbuncle abscess, red, fiery, fierce and sore. The doctor attended me over seven weeks. When the abscess broke, the pains were terrible, and I thought I should not live through it. I heard and read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I decided to take it, and my husband, who was suffering with boils, took it also. It soon purified our built me up and restored my health so that, although the doctor said I would not be able to work hard, I have since done the work for 20 people. Hood's Sarsaparilla cured my husband of the boils, and we regard it a wonderful medicine." MRS. ANNA PETERSON, Latimer, Kansas.

A CUCKOO SEEN UNAWARES.

In the Presence of Danger It Becomes Comically Long and Slim.

May I give you one of my own notes of bird study as a fair pattern to go by? It was a yellow-billed cuckoo's. "Kuk-kuk-kuk, kauk, kau-uk!" rattled forth from a tall hedge near my house that called me forth glass in hand. The bird's voice was strong enough, there could be no doubt as to the part of the hedge whence it issued; but the bird itself; I looked and looked for it before I saw it. For this cuckoo has somewhat of the conjurer's cleverness in rendering itself invisible while yet unhidden by any physical barrier or vision. It is a slender and disproportionately elongated bird, having a protracted tail and a far-reaching lightly arched bill. Something in the blending of its pale, smoky plumage, its tints of gray, pale olive, brown and white, will not separate it from leaf and twig and bark and lichen. I knew its ways, and so waited for it to move, which it presently did by erecting head and tail at a sharp V-like angle. The attitude broke the spell of my vision, and revealed the bird sitting crosswise on a bois-d'arc branch. Here the glass came quickly into play.

For thirty-five minutes I slyly followed that cuckoo, noting its every move. It was evidently quite unaware of me, and I was very careful not to attract its attention. Here are some notes made immediately after my observations:—

The cuckoo has a way of letting its wings slightly droop while it sits quite still. It is then that it turns its head slowly in every direction, looking for worms, moths and the like amid the foliage. It has a drowsy expression; one might think it a stupid bird, and its movements are generally spiritless. But the moment it sees a worm on a leaf all is changed. Like a flash comes the stroke. And yet there is no rush nor noise. The thing is done with an ease and a facility amounting to absolute grace and promptness of motion.

At the least suggestion of danger the cuckoo shuts all its feathers close and straightens itself. Then it is almost comically long and slim, looking starved and compressed and stiff, as if just pulled out of a very small hole, and appears to taper but slowly from bill to tailtop. If another bird approaches it sometimes shows fight, but oftener shies sidewise or drops lower among the branches.—Independent.

SEAMY SIDE OF HOME.

Little Miseries That Make Life Troublesome.

A great deal is said and written nowadays about the art of home-making, while very little thought is expended upon the fact that in the home certain small miseries arise and flourish which no art can letter or subdue.

In most homes there are great capabilities for happiness, and so in direct proportion of unhappiness. Not every man or woman, however well-intentioned, true and conscientious, can make the home what it ought to be. And one of the most fruitful causes of unhappiness, next to bad temper, is to be found in poor housekeeping.

Many a woman, in every respect admirable and intelligent beyond the average, cannot entirely grasp the mysteries of housekeeping. And that it is not a matter of intelligence is shown by the fact that some of the best and most skilful housewives have been those who turned their attention to little else than the ordering of their dinners and the scrupulous neatness of their homes. And who shall say that these did not make a success of housekeeping? So many, many things enter into the housekeeping for the good or ill of the household. The wife or housekeeping sister may be orderly, the husband or brothers the reverse, or the wife totally regardless of system, while the husband counts a misplaced article or a late breakfast an unpardonable sin, for which no future punctuality or neatness may condone, and these things occurring day after day, year in and year out, a consequent struggle ensues, which renders life a martyrdom. The more trivial the occasional the more bitter the sense of defeat.

HOW IT AFFECTS THEM.

"Oh," said a woman whose housekeeping was to her as the grinding of the pilgrim's pebbles in his shoes, "I know I am a miserable failure as a housekeeper! I can do half a dozen things well, but I cannot keep house." Now there is no more reason in the world why that woman should wear herself into nervous prostration trying to do a thing that in all her life she will never compass than there is that any man should become a lawyer when his tastes and aptitudes are for medicine or mechanism.

"My wife and I are much fonder of each other since we sit down every day with a dozen people than when we dined alone," said a jolly husband, who went through life very respectably and happily, though he never had a home. It is sad, but nevertheless true, that the disposition of some couples change entirely for the better as soon as they are freed from the shackles of housekeeping. Fault-finding ceases, anxious lines smooth away, and both husband and wife draw a long breath of relief.

I have known a most devoted husband and wife who, after the various domestic complications caused by the civil war, looked the matter of housekeeping squarely in the face. The wife no longer young, felt that she could not, without great personal exertion and untold worry, take up housekeeping on a totally different basis from that with which she had been familiar, and her husband was wise and considerate enough to accept her view of the situation. And to the end of their lives they boarded. So it goes. Work that to one woman is pleasant, to another one is irksome; but there is no use in fretting over circumstances—it is far better to accept the inevitable with good grace.

The Amelioration of Dentistry.

It is said that an association has been formed in Paris for the purpose of cultivating light anecdote and pleasing conversation among the wielders of the dental forceps. The graduate of the school will be endowed with a vast fund of information, both useful and ornamental, and will be taught the gentle art of varying his conversation according to the age and temperament of the patient, and the amount of torture that is being inflicted. This accomplishment has its advantages, and, in course of time, it is possible that a taciturn dentist may come to be considered as priceless a treasure as a dumb barber. American dentists have a better way of allaying the fears and mitigating the suffering of their patients. They are now able to assure them with perfect truth that the most serious dental operation can be carried out painlessly. The patient sits in the operating chair, and almost without being sensible of it is subjected to a special kind of electric current, which so soothes and refreshes him that all nervous apprehension is removed, and the subsequent operation is regarded with interest and curiosity rather than with fear. The first stage in this operation is the benumbing of the tooth. This is done by applying to it a piece of cotton saturated with cocaine and some other solution which will favor the passage of the current, and turning on electricity in such a minute stream that before the patient realizes it the tooth is anæsthetized, and can be taken out, excavated, cut in two, or merely filled without the slightest pain being felt. Up to six months ago this obtunding, as it is called, of the tooth, occupied about three minutes, but now, by combining electrozone with cocaine, the time is reduced to one minute and ten seconds.

His First Sight.

Blind people's first experience of sight is curious. An old man at Pembroke, who was born blind, received his sight by the removal of a cataract. When the bandage was first removed, the patient started violently and cried out as if with fear, and for a while was quite nervous from the effect of the shock. For the first time in his life he looked upon the earth. The first thing he noticed was a flock of wild sparrows. In relating his experience he said that he thought they were teacups, although a few moments afterwards he readily distinguished a watch which was shown to him. It is supposed that this recognition is owing to the fact that he heard it ticking. The blaze from a lamp excited the most lively surprise in his mind. He had no idea what it was, and when it was brought near wanted to pick it up. When night approached upon the day when he first used his eyes, he was in a fright, fearing that he was losing his sight which he had so wonderfully found after sixty years of darkness.

Two Bad Storms.

Mr. Winkers—I hear you have had two pretty big thunder storms lately in your town.

Old Friend—Yes; the first one struck a church, but no one was hurt. You see, the weather looked a little threatening that Sunday, and there wasn't anybody there. But the second blew over a circus tent and killed sixteen deacons and four preachers.

TURNING LIGHT ON 'EM

THE EGG CANDLER SEPARATES THE GOOD AND THE BAD.

How He Distinguished One From the Other—The X-Ray Principle Applied to a Useful Purpose—An Ingenious Boy's Method of Expediting the Work.

If Li Hung Chang's ideas of eggs prevailed in this country there would be no need for "candling." Candling eggs is absolutely necessary with those who deal in them, not for their own protection, but for the protection of their customers. If Li's ideas were in vogue here the young man who "candlies" would find his occupation gone. A fresh egg, according to Chang's notion, is abominable, while one that has been thickly coated with wax and spices and suffered to lie in a cellar for 300 or 400 years is a great table delicacy. It is asserted that Li has his egg cellar just as certain Europeans have their wine cellars and he exhibits his eggs with as much complacency as an European would his various rare old vintages. For example: "These eggs are from the market of 1673. That was a very good year for eggs, as you will discover when we partake of these spiced delicacies." All of which is seriously written.

So they have no need of the man who candles eggs in the land of birds' nests puddings and shark fin fricassee. But in Toronto fresh eggs are in demand and the services of the man who candles is constantly needed. What is candling an egg? How many of the public know? Is it covering them with candle grease, just as Li covers them with wax and spices? No; nothing so heathenish. It is the process of looking at eggs by the light of a candle; it is the application of the X-ray process. The man who candles knew all about the X-rays long before there was all this fuss about them. He applied the principle to eggs long ago, looking right through the shell to see what was beneath it. Seated in a dark corner on a stool, he takes egg after egg, makes a telescope of his hand, squints through the telescope at the candle, with the egg as a lense and by the light which appears within the shell he is enabled to judge as to the character of the egg. If the egg is in good standing and would commend itself to the housewife the interior is illuminated with a golden radiance. If it has seen better days the radiance is wanting, the egg does not make a good lense, the X-rays fail to penetrate the opaque interior. The man who candles has a crate before him and a barrel on one side. The good eggs are placed in the crate and the bad ones in the barrel. Sometimes the bad eggs will run almost in the majority and the proximity of the barrel is not exactly agreeable. But the man who candles is not very sensitive about this. His nostrils have been trained like those of Li Hung Chang. Often a small boy is employed to candle eggs. If he is trustworthy, well and good. One small boy displayed as much ingenuity as the lad who invented that important part of the steam engine which enabled him to go and play and not remain to watch the engine. He was to receive so much per crate for candling the eggs. He worked remarkably fast—suspiciously so—and his employer found out the reason. Instead of picking up the eggs one by one and holding them to the light, he had a board containing many holes. In each hole he would put an egg and when the holes were filled, he passed the candle beneath the eggs, throwing out those which were opaque and failed to show the golden luster. The lad was commended for his ingenuity. He had seen that the labor of handling twenty or thirty crates of eggs was simply immense and had devised this labor-saving contrivance in order to make his task easier. He was very unlike the boy who candled every third or fourth egg and let the other eggs take their chances. The next day the proprietor was called up by 'phone.

"I thought you said those were candled eggs?"

"Well, they were."

"Not," answered the voice. "Six out of a dozen were—well, you know."

"Is that so?"

"Yes, sir: send around for the whole batch."

"All right, I will."

Then the proprietor walked back into the store softly. There was Master Boy seated on his stool in the dark corner, contentedly smoking a cigarette. When he saw the proprietor he made a wild dash for eggs and began to candle them at the rate of sixty a minute. But the proprietor lifted him by the collar. "I guess I'll put you in that barrel," he said, pointing to the bad egg barrel. The boy's eyes fairly popped out, and he began to howl. Then the proprietor dropped him into the alley and found some one else to candle over again all the crates. Candled eggs, of course, are not strictly fresh eggs. The latter it is almost impossible to find, and the best substitutes are cold storage or limed eggs which have been candled. Some people are so unreasonable as to imagine they ought to get fresh eggs in winter time, direct from the hen coop, at a season when the hens are not laying. The following is a bona fide bit of conversation between a grocer and a dealer in eggs:—

"Got any fresh eggs?"

"Yes, fresh—cold storage." The last two words rather low.

"All right," said the man at the 'phone. "Send along three crates."

"Send and get 'em."

So the crates were sent up. Several days later the 'phone rang.

"Say, I thought you said those eggs were fresh?"

"They are; fresh cold storage."

"They don't taste fresh; they have a bad odor."

"No fresher eggs, sir, in Toronto than those."

"Well, I bought 'em for fresh eggs, and they ain't."

"They are. They're what is known as fresh eggs. You expect me to go out to the hencoop and get eggs for you every morning. Those are what are known in Toronto at this season of the year as strictly fresh eggs."

"I won't keep 'em."

"Oh, yes, you will. 'Cause I won't take 'em back. We can't sell things that way. You've got the eggs and they're good enough. The trouble with you is you are too all-fired particular. You want the hens to lay 365 days in the year. We don't regulate that. The eggs are the freshest in town, and if you don't like 'em you can do the other thing. They were all candled, carefully selected and you can't find one downright bad one in the whole collection."

"I can find some that don't smell very nice.',

"Oh, you're too particular. You ought not to eat eggs. You ought to go and live on a farm. That's the only place you could find eggs to suit you. Why, no one else is complaining about them eggs. They give universal satisfaction. Don't talk any more about sending them back. They're your fresh eggs now, because you bought them and we have your money, Good-bye!"

Thousands of crates of eggs are candled during the winter for consumption in Toronto, They are not the kind of eggs one wants poached, or soft boiled, although possibly they might deceive some people when they were scrambled. The dealers in eggs claim that they earn all their profits, since they are obliged to throw away so many eggs in the candling process for which they have paid.

Ketchup for Life.

When I was a boy they spelled it "catsup," but "ketchup" will do for this story. The article is made of tomatoes over in New Jersey, and has an enormous sale. A dear old lady in Connecticut heard of it, and, having a reputation in the neighborhood for making ketchup, determined to try it. A bottle was purchased in the village and on the following morning Aunt Jemima started for New Jersey. Arriving at the factory she called for the proprietor, informed him that his ketchup was, if anything, a little better than hers, and as she didn't propose to be outdone at home, she wanted his recipe. It was the first time she had ever heard of a ketchup being better than hers. The proprietor said, smiling at her innocence: "My dear madam, I can not give you my recipe, but if you will leave your name and address I will see that you get as many bottles of ketchup every season as you may want all the rest of your life." She returned home only half satisfied, but the first installment of a dozen quart bottles eased her troubled spirit.—New York Press.
