

Kensington Man Joins Canada Life Millionaire Club

The Canada Life Assurance Company are pleased to announce that Robert S. Carruthers, Kensington, has recently attained membership in the "Millionaire Club."

Mr. Carruthers since joining the Company five years ago has placed in force over one million dollars of life insurance. This represents a fine service to the public and protection and guaranteed security. He has also earned the National Quality Award for the past three years, 1950, 51 and 52. This award is given in recognition of quality life underwriting to the public as evidenced in an excellent record of maintaining in force and extending the benefits of life insurance.

LONDON, (CP)—The international wool secretariat claims that styles of 1949 will be the fashions for men this Coronation Year. It predicted dark-grey worsted suits with long jackets and trousers narrowing at the ankle.

Aged Resident of Prince County.

Mrs. Gaspard Arsenault, one of the oldest residents of Prince County, is shown above. Although she will be celebrating her one hundredth birthday next September, and is confined to her bed, Mrs. Arsenault enjoys fairly good health, and has a fine memory, recalling many experiences of years gone by. The former Catherine Wedge, she is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wedge of Fortune Cove, and is the last surviving member of a large family. She resides with her daughter, Mrs. Joseph DesRoches of Howland Station, and another daughter lives in Halifax. Her husband died some years ago.

Let's Talk It Over

by "d"

Next Monday ushers in another Education Week. Across the length and breadth of Canada, a great deal will be written and spoken about the value of Education to our country and citizens, and about the fact that it should be "everybody's business." The slogan is a good one, because, although a great many things are said to be wrong with Education today, there is little doubt that the chief weakness of our educational picture is that so many people are not greatly interested whether it is bright or drab.

That the business of teaching is one of the most poorly paid vocations is not something to be marvelled at. It stems naturally from the fact that formal education is one of the least regarded activities in this day and age. Make no mistake about it. In this so-much-for-so-much era people will pay for what they want. They will, of course, demand a top-notch product, but they will pay handsomely for the things that interest them. Education is considered, like the kitchen sink, a necessity to every Canadian home, but it has never caught the imagination of the great majority of our people. Its possibilities as a cultural, humanizing power are not appreciated.

"Education Weeks" should help to correct this attitude. At least, we get out products in the show windows where the passing parade can see them. If the goods are attractive, and not shoddy, the parade may pause for a moment and see what we have for sale. Like successful businesses, we've got to advertise, and when the people arrive in answer to our ad, we've got to be able to produce the goods as advertised. We've got to guarantee satisfaction.

There is, however, a vicious circle operating against educators. Returns, monetary and otherwise, are not attractive, so prospective serious shortage develops, and in a lucrative field of endeavour. A teachers turn to other more frantic effort to meet the situation, people who are half-trained, quarter-trained, and even not trained at all, are recruited to fill in the gaps. The level of service drops, and there is no incentive for people to pay more money for an inferior product.

By all means, however, let's continue our "Education Weeks". Like the heroic captain of the Flying Enterprise, let's stick to the ship, although it be buffeted by adverse winds. The storm of public indifference may someday abate, and enable us to save the cargo. Who knows, some day, in all countries, even in Russia, nations will spend on education the money they now

Hospital Patients Enjoy Films

A year and a half ago the Summerside Y's Men's Club began a project that has brought pleasure, relaxation, and entertainment to approximately 500 patients at the Prince County Hospital.

One night each week members of the Summerside Y's Men's Club have presented a full length motion picture for all patients who were well enough to walk or be wheeled to the ward-sized room in which the films are shown. More than 300 service hours have been put into this project by members of the Summerside Club, and some elderly people as well as children who have seen some of these shows were attending a motion picture show for the first time in their lives.

The above photo shows some of the patients at the show on Wednesday evening of this week, while three of the Y's Men are doing their part to make the evening more enjoyable for the patients.

Jack Hopkirk, who has been chairman of the film committee since it started, is seen threading the film into the projector. Frank Cameron, (left), replaces a reel of film in the container; and Harold Milligan, (right), has just moved the bed of a little girl and her doll into a better position for viewing the show.
