Curfew, Armed Troops Put Pall Over Accra

By DENNIS LEE ROYLE

ACCRA, Ghana (AP)—A dusk to dawn curfew, armed troops at government buildings, police searches and numerous threats have thrown a pall of suspicion and uncertainty over this capital.

Formerly a gay city, with music blaring through the night, Accra now has gone the way of many newborn African states.

Recent bomb attacks on President Kwame Nkrumah indicates the growing unrest in this one-party, one-leader state.

For weeks a virtual prisoner in his Accra residence, Flagstaff House, Nkrumah has appeared only twice during the last few weeks: at a military parade and the delayed opening of Parliament.

Even then there were elaborate precautions for each appearance. He was accompanied by more than 100 armed security forces mid an air of tension and suspicion.

PROTECTIVE VEST

Also noticeable during these two brief outings was the fact that Nkrumah, who used to wear the Roman toga styled Kenti, a multi-colored national garment, had changed over to a severe white tunic, which bulged ominously from the high-buttoned neck down to his waist. Observers guessed he was wearing some sort of protective vest.

Accra's life centres around the governmental offices, its bustling market place and high-life night clubs. Shows and movie theatres now are closed.

Hotels are forced to shut their dining rooms by early evening.

At night, guests are not allowed outside the doors of the palatial government-owned Ambassador Hotel which is guarded by 12 armed policemen.

The pro-government Ghanaian Times issues a daily dosage of violent propaganda against the "imperilist foreign press," "the neo-colonialists" and the "British colonial robbers." Censorship has been imposed on outgoing news and radio broadcasts.

STRANGE CONTRAST

Black Star Square, Accra's showpiece of architectural splendor which cost more than £1,000,000 offers a strange contrast to the pitiful slum areas that encircle the city. People line up to collect water only a few yards away from where water is sloshed on the flower beds of Kwame Nkrumah Square.

Hundreds of thousands of Ghanian workers receive the minimum daily wage of less than 6s 6d. A recent suggestion by Nkrumah that cheap food should be produced to feed these multitudes prompted the Ghanaian Times to place the blame for high food costs on the British colonial administration "who for 114 years had robbed and dominated us."

Many new anti - government underground organizations have been formed. A tribal group called the Unknown Warriors and a powerful group known as the Kumasi Command coupled with an active exiled group operating from neighboring Togoland add to Nkrumah's problems.

He now is faced with the choice of relinquishing his one-party rule and discarding harsh legislation or ruthlessly crushing any opposition which hopes to topple his supreme command.

Check Diet Before Vitamins, University Food Expert Says

By PATRICIA RUSAK

TORONTO (CP)—The word "vitamins" seems to mean the same thing to consumers as "Christmas" — buy, buy, buy. But next time you are tempted by those shiny bottles lining drug store shelves, go home and check the family diet first.

"All the vitamins a person needs, except perhaps for vitamin D, are supplied by a normal, healthy diet," says Marjorie Phillips, an assistant professor in the faculty of household science, University of Toronto.

Vitamin D, however, active in building tissues but not abundant in foods, must often be taken in concentrated form by growing children, pregnant women and older people who seldom get out into the sunshine.

The healthy daily diet, as defined by the federal department of health and welfare, consists of milk, fruit (citrus or tomatoes or their juices and another fresh fruit), vegetables (one serving of potatoes and another of leafy green, yellow or raw), whole grain cereal, bread, eggs and meat, poultry or fish.

"Eating each of these foods every day does not mean that a diet needs to be heavy." Those who are reducing can eat a portion of all of them and still keep their diet under 1,000 calories a day, says Miss Phillips.

"The most common fallacy in buying vitamins is that you should try to get the most for your money." For example, if one label says 2,000 units of vitamin A while another reads 5,000 units, the consumer will probably buy the latter thinking she is getting more for her money.

"She forgets that if she serves one-half a canteloup to each member of her family, they will get all the vitamin A they need for that day."

And it is ridiculous to take pills containing 10 milligrams of thiamine when the daily requirement is one milligram, says Miss Phillips.

The daily requirement of vitamins A, B (thiamine, riboflavin and niacin), C and D is quite small, says Miss Phillips.

"There is no evidence that if you have more vitamins than you need that you'll get additional pep over and above that which you would have if you followed a normal diet and were in good health."

And a massive overdose of vitamins, for example 75,000 units of vitamin A for several months, can often have harmful effects. An overdose of vitamin A could result in scaliness of the skin, nausea and general loss of appetite, and an overdose of vitamin D could lead to bone damage.

Miss Phillips now is studying the effects of excess B vitamins on growing rats, a beginning to learning how excess B vitamins might affect the human body processes. She has found that under certain conditions, there are harmful effects.

"There are legitimate reasons when massive doses of vitamins are necessary for certain illnesses, but then a doctor should prescribe the appropriate vitamin and dosage."

HUNTERS' DEATH

There were 22 deaths among 126 hunting accidents reported in Ontario in 1961.

GM Heading For Big Year

NEW YORK (AP) — General Motors Corp., headed for a record profit year, Monday declared a year-end dividend of $1.50 a share, or $1 in excess of the regular quarterly rate of 50 cents.

The pay out, voted by General Motors directors, will bring total common stock dividends for 1962 to $3.

This compares with $2.50 total paid last year, including a $1 yearend dividend and regular 50 cents quarterly payments in March, June and September.

The dividend declared today will be distributed in cheques grossing about $425,000,000 to 1,025,000 General Motors stockholders. It is payable Dec. 10 to holders of record Nov. 15.

A higher year-end payment had been widely heralded in Wall Street.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Opening lead—jack of clubs.

Let's say, as an abstract proposition, that you as declarer have the K-10-9-x-x of a suit and dummy has the A -x -xx and you're trying to win all the tricks in that suit.

Of course, this may not be possible if the opponents' cards are unfavorably divided, but suppose, when you lead low to the ace, your left handopponent plays the queen (or jack) and when you lead the suit back, your right-hand opponent plays low.

Should you now play the king, hoping to catch the other honor, or should you finesse on the basis that your left -hand opponent was dealt a singleton?

Mathematically, there is no doubt that you should finesse. The odds are almost 2 to 1 in favor of the finesse under the conditions stated.

This is a valuable thing to know and you can often gain points by putting the knowledge to use, but a word of caution is in order. There may be circumstances in the particular hand you're dealing with when you should play for the drop instead of the finesse.

Here is a case of that type. West leads a club and you take it and lead a heart to the ace, West playing the jack. You return a heart and East follows low. Ordinarily, you would finesse the nine, but in this hand, for a very good reason, you play the king.

The fact that you happen to catch the queen is not the issue. The point is that you can assure the contract by playing the king, whether West follows suit or not.

Suppose West shows out, proving that East had the Q-8-5 originally. You cash your other club, enter dummy with a diamond, and ruff the last club.

Then you run your diamonds. If East doesn't ruff, you put him in the lead with a trump. That forces him to lead a spade or give you a ruff and discard.

Going up with the king of hearts is a safety play to guaranteethe contract.
