see what the trouble was. "Has something happened?" he asked in his soft gentle voice.

"Yes, replied Welcome Robin a bit sharply for he was upset.

"What?" asked Winsome.

"An egg," replied Welcome Robin.

Winsome Bluebird looked puzzled. "How could an egg happen?" he asked.

"You tell us," retorted Welcome. "It wasn't here a few minutes ago and now it is here, and it doesn't belong to us."

"I'll say it doesn't," spoke up Mrs. Welcome.

"If it isn't yours whose is it? You seem to have it," said Winsome Bluebird. He knew whose egg it was. He was pretending he didn't.

"It is Sally Sly's," said Welcome.

"How do you know it? Did you see her leave it there?" asked Winsome Bluebird, his voice as gentle as ever.

"Of course we didn't see her. Do you think we would have allowed her to leave that egg if we had seen her?" retorted Mrs. Welcome indignantly.

"Have you seen her around at all today?" Winsome wanted to know.

Welcome Robin had to admit that they hadn't. He didn't like to, but he was honest. "But what difference does that make?" he added.

"If you don't see a person do a thing, don't even see the person in the neighborhood, how can you be sure that that person did that particular thing?" asked Winsome Bluebird. He was trying to be just "Tut, tut, tut, tut, tut!" scolded Jenny Wren hopping from twig to twig. She couldn't keep still. "Tut, tut, tut, tut! That's easy."

"How so?" asked Winsome and Welcome and Mrs. Welcome all together.

"By the egg. Nobody but Sally Sly the Cowbird lays an egg like that. Any one who knows eggs would know that is a Cowbird's egg, so of course Sally Sly left it in that nest. It is no one's fault but your own. You shouldn't have left your nest. Tut, tut, tut, tut! Such carelessness!" said Jenny Wren to Mrs. Welcome, then hurried home to make sure Johnny Wren was doing his duty on guard. He was.
