

MISCELLANEOUS.

NATIVE LIFE IN ALGERIA.—An Arab may live somewhat luxuriously at the East of Buzian, and indulge in a good supper after sunset at Ramadan; but at least three hundred days in the year are with him Banayan ones. A handful of rice, or a ladleful of meal, which costs little, or a few fruits, and plenty of spring water, which costs nothing, and he is satisfied. "Contra solidi," says the Neapolitan lazzaroni, "vice magis, et la facia" — far three-halves a day we have heard, lodging and smoking. The Blessed Sun pays for the roof. The Arab seems to live quite as economically. Stay, he is very fond of smoking; well, you may buy capital tobacco in Algiers for a franc a pound, and cigars are to be had three for a sou; but the Arab husbandman grows his own tobacco. Coffee, again, he delights in; but in a Moorish cafe the fragrant beverage is only a half-penny a cup. It is true that the cup is not much bigger than a good-sized tumbler. When the Arab is sleepy—and when he has finished buying and selling he generally becomes drowsy—he first draws the cow of his burmose over his face, kicks off his shoes, uses his arm or a nice hard stone as a pillow, and sleeps the sleep of the just. This is all the going to bed he requires. In fact, there is no such a thing as a bed in the Oriental scheme of society. The richest wrap themselves up and fling themselves on hearth-rugs or sofas; but "turning in" is an unknown ceremony. The ordinary bolsters of the dormitory, as I have elsewhere hinted, are articles of dress, and to go about clad in a pillow-case and a pair of sheets is, with a lady, to attain the height of fashion. Every night, on the Place du Gouvernement, you may see numbers of Arabs crouched at full length on the marble parapet of the quay, or on the steps of the Mosque of the lecherie. I do not think the authorities will suffer them to sleep under the arcades of the streets; but the nooks and crannies which the closely-clustered houses in the by-lanes of the old Moorish town afford generally shelter nightly slumbers, who in England would clearly bring themselves within the provisions of that clause in the New Police Act which prohibits sleeping in the open air. The Arabs snoring a la Belle Etoile in the Place are not beggars, else they would be in goal. They may be, for aught I can tell, cheiks of high degree; or perhaps they are philosophers of even a more advanced degree of cynicism, than Diogenes, looking upon a tub as an effeminate luxury, and nodding a stone couch and the stars for a blanket as the only sleeping accommodation fit for a Mussulman sage.

Queen Insurance Company OF LIVERPOOL.

FIRE AND LIFE! Capital, £1,000,000 Sterling. THE Subscriber, having been appointed Agent for the above first class Insurance Company, is prepared to take risks on all descriptions of property. [EXTRACTS FROM NEWSPAPERS.] On reference to a return made to Parliament, and ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 7th June, 1861, it will be seen that the increase of Duty had caused the Queen Insurance Company, within the same period, ever attained so large an income in either the Fire or Life Departments as the Queen Insurance Company. In making this statement, the agent is beyond all question in favour of our older local companies, namely, the Liverpool and London, and the Lancashire Insurance Companies. [From the Civil Service Gazette, Nov. 2, 1861.] Among these important institutions stand eminent for their solidity, as well as for their success, "the Queen Insurance Company," which last week held their annual meeting in Liverpool, and in reference to the ample report in another page will fully satisfy every reader of the financial progress made by this association since its formation. Such success is, indeed, rarely attained, and it attests at once the excellence of its management, and the public confidence in its constitution. [From the Liverpool Mercury, Nov. 2, 1861.] It may be gratifying to the public generally, and especially to the proprietors, to find that its income during the past three years has increased at the rate of no less than 100 per cent. We believe that no other Company, within the same short period, ever attained so large an increase either in the Fire or Life Departments. This speaks highly for the ability and energy of its management, and the promptness with which all the claims arising out of the late disastrous fire in London were met. Test to the confidence of the public in the management, and the public confidence in its constitution.
