ELLEN'S DIARY "I Feel So Right As This Farmer's Wife"

"Do come!" one with seven-league boots begs James. And "better come" they suggest to some of those islanders who now in the glistening white snow of approaching winter, make plans to follow sooner or later the songbirds to the South. But James smiles and shakes his head and with the younger farmer of the place discusses the forward plans of the farm. They speak of "those feeders we're fattening," "that heater we must keep to raise calves," and "if we do have plenty of them to do away with fast gilt in the first pen, since she's one of the most likely-losing of the young ones we have!"

And not without certain invigilating visions of summery skies in the backdrop of mind, we on the recent "pet" day, look care to store, in garden-rides to the cellar, the basket of good earth we shall need in the winter white of the new year, to root the Gloxinias and Begonias; and later when the crows lift voices along the heights in welcoming sounds, to start for another summer, the slips and seedlings aye.

And we find we look forward with pleasant anticipations to these Island Winter days with certainty lead.

And what of this week? We assemble now our remembrances. It was one of bare branches in existing silhouette against mostly silvery skies; of fitful sunshine, and mist on the hills; of the dark comeliness of spruce and fir; of brief days and lengthened nights, of lamplight and wood-fire; and once more the content of night-stabled stock. It was boyings and sellings and the plans, which after all are the bedrock of the occupation that is ours. And each day the fields grew closer to the rest time, the farmsteads settled down cozily amid their sheltering trees and their groves.

And somewhat lonely it is true, in the absence of those Islanders, winter-borne elsewhere, as lights as we have long known go out for a time here and there along the face of the countryside. We nevertheless own to a rare content as we look into the sea-

With none to impede his progress, nor question his speed. Not all this is changed and science comes forth. With a moon, that is challenging all. But the man is missing, and Laika the dog has found a wonderful home. But the speed of the moon is too severe. And he battles and fights his way. And hoping to meet the man in the moon. And on find a companion but Nay? The Fates were against it. Poor Laika gave up the struggle and passed away. So the man in the moon is still suspense. Rolling on and on night and day. Mary T. Gavin, R.N.

NEVER NEGLECT AN EARLY WINTER COUGH!

The racking cough that often follows a cold can be hard to shake off at this time of the year. So don't wait for it to get deeply established. As soon as any member of the family shows signs of developing a cough, reach for the Pinex bottle. There's no quicker relief. The very first spoonful of Pinex Cough Syrup goes soothingly to work. It loosens the distressing tickle and eases the soreness of inflamed membranes. In no time you have the cough under control. Buy Pinex in the concentrated form for home mixing economy or as convenient ready-to-take Prepared Pinex. Your druggist has both.
