Frailty's Shield.

[From the American Magazine.]
Look what arms the fenceless wild,
Fraillest things have frailty's shield!
Cockle-boat outrides the gale
That has shored the frigate's sail;
Curlew skims the breaker's crest,
Swings the oriole in its nest;
Flower a single summer bred
Lightly lifts its jaunty head
When is past the storm whose stroke
Laid the pride of centuries oak;
When with fire the soil was lathed
The white trefoil springs unscathed.

Fraillest things have frailty's shield:
Here a fly in amber sealed;
There a bubble, tossed aside
Under ancient lava-tide,
Meets the missing delver's gaze,
Time the king's memorial lays,
Touching it with sportive staff,
But spares Eriotion's epitaph.

Fraillest things have frailty's shield,
Guarded by a charm concealed;
So the gaunt and ravening wild
Softens toward the weanling child,
And along the giddy steep
Safe one gildeth, blind with sleep.
Art thou mighty?—Challenged Fate
Choosest thee for wrestling mate!
Art thou feeble?—Fate disarmed,
Turning, leaveth thee unharmed.
Thou that bendest shalt not break;
Smiling in the tempest's wake,
Thou shalt rise, and see around
How the strong ones strew the ground;
Saying lightness thou didst wield,
Fraillest things have frailty's shield!

Spiritualism.

(Montreal Star.)
The true position of spiritualism has been hotly debated, its believers loudly asserting its reality while its opponents have scoffed and sneered unmercifully at the credulity of its adherents. Time and again some noted medium has been conclusively proved to be nothing but a clumsy fraud, but this has not shaken the belief of ardent spiritualists. An investigation has been taking place in the States which ought conclusively to decide upon the claims of so-called spiritualism. A Mr. Seyburt, who had become a convert, left the sum of sixty thousand dollars to found a chair of philosophy at Philadelphia University, upon the condition of the appointment of a commission to investigate and report upon spiritualism. The commission consisted of ten gentlemen of scientific culture and position, all of whom were unprejudiced with regard to the subject of enquiry, while one or two were rather favorable towards it. As a counsellor, they had Mr. Hazard, an ardent spiritualist, and they appear to have followed his advice in their investigation. They complain of the exorbitant prices asked by professional mediums, and of the apparent unwillingness of both professionals and amateurs to aid the investigation. This is not at all a good feature, as it would naturally be expected that all mediums would be anxious to place themselves at the service of an independent and reliable commission that they might demonstrate the truth of their claims. However, they secured some of the more celebrated mediums, the first being Mrs. Patterson, who is famous for the slate writing manifestations. The report says that this lady failed to do anything wonderful except on one occasion when the screw which fastened the two slates had been withdrawn. When Mr. Hazard alone took part in a seance, however, the slate worked admirably. They also examined the slate manifestations with the aid of Professor Slade, who was so thoroughly exposed in the public courts in London some years ago, and punished for obtaining money under false pretences. With the commission, Slade also was not a success, and some of the members managed to find some messages, already written, on spare slates, showing that the spirits liked to be ahead of time. The commission says, with regard to this slate writing, that "the human eye is fatal to all spiritual manifestations," and that a pocket mirror, carefully adjusted, but unknown to the medium, reflected fingers that were anything but spiritual tampering with the slate. Communications from the spirit world were so hopelessly inaccurate as to be ridiculous.

The evident result of the commission's labors has been to prove either that the whole of the mediumistic spiritualism is a thorough fraud, or else that spirits deteriorate immensely in sense and knowledge after they leave this mundane sphere. When mediums, whose gifts are acknowledged by the spiritualists, are found out in trickery of such a clumsy type that the poorest professional conjurer would be ashamed of it, it requires a great deal of faith to believe in them. When they are able to carry out the manifestations in the presence of credulous believers, but fail utterly before intelligent men who are only anxious to find the truth, then the mediums are frauds, or the spirits are of a characteraverse to truth, and, therefore, their companionship is to be avoided by all respectable people.

Give Them a Chance!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air-passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.
When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do, they cannot do well.
Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else has failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

American News.

The building boom in the Western States has slightly abated, though prices are still extreme.
The mortality in New York on the 1st inst., was greater than on any other day this year. One hundred and seventy persons died, the greater number from cholera infantum. The mercury reached 95 in the shade, Thursday, and 93 on Friday afternoon.
The Herald, in a special, announces that the North Atlantic squadron, consisting of the corvette Richmond, with Rear-Admiral Luce's pennant, the Osagee, the Galena and the Yantic, is anchored in Boston harbor, and continues:—"The Osagee went up to the navy yard to fit for a cruise off the Nova Scotia coast, and will first terrorize the Blue Noses at Halifax. The remainder of the squadron will follow in a fortnight. The present plan is to go up the St. Lawrence as far as Quebec."

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

Hearty Food.

From Professor Atwater's illustrated article in the July CENTURY, we note the following: "I well remember how the sensible and thrifty New England people among whom my boyhood was spent used to talk about 'hearty victuals,' and how prevalent were the doctrines that 'a hard-working man wants real hearty food,' and that 'children ought to have hearty food, but not too hearty.'"
"With these eminently orthodox tenets the science of nutrition in its newest developments is in fullest accord. But there [always] used to be an unsatisfactory vagueness about them. I never could make out exactly what were 'hearty' foods, and in just what their heartiness consisted. It has since occurred to me that these words express one of the ideas which the unerring sense and instinct of man have wrought out of his long experience, but have waited for science to put into clear and definite form. The synonymy with which our science defines this idea is energy. Hearty foods are those in which there is an abundance of potential energy.

The lumbermen in the Maine forests work intensely in the cold and snows of winter and in the icy water in the spring. To endure the severe labor and cold, they must have food to yield a great deal of heat and strength. Beans and fat pork are staple articles of diet with them, and are used in very large quantities. The beans supply protein to make up for the wear and tear of muscle, and they, and more especially the pork, are very rich in energy to be used for warmth and work.
"I cannot vouch for the following, which has just struck my eye in a daily paper, but, if it is true, the workmen were sound in their physiology:—
"A lot of woodchoppers who worked for Mr. H. stopped work the other day, and sent a spokesman to their employer, who said that the men were satisfied with their wages and most other things, but didn't like 'your fresh meat; that's too fancy, and hasn't got strength into it.' Mr. H. gave them salt pork three times a day, and peace at once resumed its sway."

"The use of oily and fatty foods in arctic regions is explained by the great potential energy of fat, a pound of which is equal to over two pounds of protein or starch. I have been greatly surprised to see, on looking into the matter, how commonly and largely the fatter kinds of meat are used by men engaged in very hard labor. Men in training for athletic contests, as oarsman and football teams, eat large quantities of meat. I have often queried why so much fat beef is used, and especially why mutton is often recommended in preference to beef for training diet. Both the beef and the mutton are rich in protein, which makes muscle. Mutton has the advantage of containing more fat along with the protein, and hence more potential energy. Perhaps this is another case in which experience has led to practice, the real grounds for which have later been explained by scientific research."
