CHAPTER XLV.

The door closed again, and the only light in the cell was that of the evening sky, through the small high grating—enough to discern human faces by. Dinah stood still for a minute, hesitating to speak, because Hetty might be asleep; and looking at the motionless heap with a yearning heart. Then she said, softly, 'Hetty?'

There was a slight movement perceptible in Hetty's frame—a start such as might have been produced by a feeble electrical shock; but she did not look up. Dinah spoke again, in a tone made stronger by irrepresible emotion: 'Hetty—it's Dinah.'

Again there was a slight startled movement through Hetty's frame, and without uncovering her face, she raised her head a little, as if listening.

'Hetty—Dinah is come to you.' After a moment's pause, Hetty lifted her head slowly and timidly from her knees, and raised her eyes. The two pale faces were looking at each other; one with a wild, hard despair in it, the other full of sad, yearning love. Dinah unconsciously opened her arms and stretched them out.

'Don't you know me, Hetty? Don't you remember Dinah? Did you think I wouldn't come to you in trouble? Hetty kept her eyes fixed on Dinah's face—at first like an animal that gazes, and gazes, and keeps aloof.

'I'm come to be with you, Hetty—not to leave you—to stay with you—to be your sister to the last.'

Slowly, while Dinah was speaking, Hetty rose took a step forward, and was clasped in Dinah's arms.

They stood so a long while, for neither of them felt the impulse to move apart again. Hetty, without any distinct thought of it, hung on this something that was come to clasp her now, while she was sinking helpless in a dark gulf; and Dinah felt a deep joy in the first sign that her love was welcomed by the wretched lost one. The light got fainter as they stood, and when at last they sat down on the straw pallet together, their faces had become indistinct.

Not a word was spoken. Dinah waited, hoping for a spontaneous word from Hetty, but she sat in the same dull despair, only clutching the hand that held hers, leaning her cheek against Dinah's. It was the human contact she clung to, but she was not the less sinking into the dark gulf.

Dinah began to doubt whether Hetty was conscious who it was that sat beside her. She thought suffering and fear might have driven the poor sinner out of her mind. But it was borne in upon her, as she afterward said that she must not hurry God's work; we are over-hasty to speak—as if God did not manifest himself by our still feeling, and make his love felt through ours. She did not know how long they sat in that way, but it got darker and darker, till there was only a pale patch of light on the opposite wall; all the rest was darkness. But she felt the Divine Presence more and more—nay, as if she herself were a part of it, and it was the Divine pity that was beating in her heart, and was willing the rescue of this helpless one. At last she was prompted to speak, and find out how far Hetty was conscious of the present.

'Hetty,' she said, gently, 'do you know who it is that sits by your side?'

'Yes,' Hetty answered slowly, 'it's Dinah.'

'And do you remember the time when we were at the Hall Farm together, and that night when I told you to be sure and think of me as a friend in trouble?'

'Yes,' said Hetty. Then, after a pause, she added, 'But you can do nothing for me. You can't make 'em do anything. They'll hang me o' Monday—it's Friday now.'

As Hetty said the last words she clung closer to Dinah, shuddering.

'No, Hetty, I can't save you from that death. But isn't the suffering less hard when you have somebody with you that feels for you—that you can speak to, and say what's in your heart? . . . Yes, Hetty, you lean on me; you are glad to have me with you.'

'You won't leave me, Dinah? You'll keep close to me?'

'No, Hetty, I won't leave you. I'll stay with you to the last. . . . But, Hetty, there is some one else in this cell besides me, some one close to you.'

Hetty said in a frightened whisper, 'Who?'

'Some one who has been with you through all your hours of sin and trouble—who has known every thought you have had—has seen where you went, where you laid down and rose up again, and all the deeds you have tried to hide in darkness. And on Monday, when I can't follow you: when my arms can't reach you; when death has parted us: He who is with us now, and knows all, will be with you then. It makes no difference, whether we live or die, we are in the presence of God.'

'Oh, Dinah, won't nobody do anything for me? Will they hang me for certain? . . . I wouldn't mind if they'd let me live.'

'My poor Hetty, death is very dreadful to you. I knew it's dreadful. But if you had a friend to take care of you after death, in that other world, some one whose love is greater than mine, who can do every thing. . . . If God, our Father, was your friend, and was willing to save you from sin and suffering, so as you should neither know wicked feelings nor pain again? If you could believe he loved you and would help you, as you believe I love you and will help you, it wouldn't be so hard to die on Monday, would it?'

'But I can't know anything about it,' Hetty said, with sullen sadness.

'Because, Hetty, you are shutting up your soul against Him, by trying to bide the truth. God's love and mercy can overcome all things, ignorance and weakness, and all the burden of our past wickedness, all things but our wilful sin: sin that we cling to and will not give up. You believe in my love and pity for you, Hetty; but if you had not let me come near you, if you wouldn't have looked at me or spoken to me, you'd have shut me out from helping you; I couldn't have made you feel my love; I couldn't have told you what I felt for you? Don't shut God's love out in that way by clinging to sin. He can't bless you while you have one falsehood in your soul; His pardoning mercy can't reach you until you open your heart to Him and say, 'I have done this great wickedness; O God, save me, and make me pure from sin.' While you cling to one sin and will not part with it, it must drag you down to misery after death, as it has dragged you to misery in this world, my poor, poor Hetty. It is sin that brings dread and darkness, and despair; there is light and blessedness for us as soon as we cast it off; God enters our souls then, and teaches us, and brings us strength and peace. Cast it off now. Hetty, now; confess the wickedness you have done, the sin you have been guilty of against God, your heavenly Father. Let us kneel down together; for we are in the presence of God.'

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

City Improvements—A Suggestion.

Sir,—Whilst the subject of city improvement is occupying the minds of citizens and city fathers, I beg to suggest a remedy for the inconvenience felt through the closing to the public of the Government House grounds.

If the reader will take the trouble to stand at the corner of Kent and West Streets, (near Mr. Cundall's) he will see that by throwing a light and inexpensive bridge, tastefully constructed across the Government Pond in continuation of West Street, with a pathway leading through the exhibition grounds, and a gate at the corner opposite Donald McKinnon's residence, the pleasure seekers desirous of reaching the park will at once attain his object, and avoid the decidedly unpleasant orders and dirt of the "bog" and the tannery.

A very trifling sum would construct a bridge, say four planks wide; and, by its being done, a great boon would not only be conferred upon the citizens, but also upon the residents on the Brighton Road. The latter pay the same taxes as the people in the city, and it cannot be said they receive much in return therefor, as they are entirely without gas, sidewalks, police and fire protection. It would also improve the appearance of the Pond, and the value of its surroundings. I hope, therefore, the representatives of Ward 5 will take the matter up and carry the suggestion out.

Yours,
PEDESTRIAN.

Canada and Newfoundland.

THEIR TRADE RELATIONS DISCUSSED BY SIR AMBROSE SHEA AT OTTAWA AND WASHINGTON.

A meeting of the members of the Montreal corn exchange and board of trade was held on the 23rd inst., to discuss with Sir Ambrose Shea the trade relations of Canada and Newfoundland and also the result of the negotiations with the American Government regarding the fishery question. Sir Ambrose said that he had been requested by the Newfoundland chamber of commerce to visit Washington, there to discuss and arrange a remedy for difficulties in consequence of the approaching expiration of the fishery clauses of the Washington treaty. The Newfoundland government had been authorized by the Imperial government to negotiate with the American government directly on the subject.

At Washington he had met with a courteous reception from the Secretary of State. He pointed out to Mr. Bayard that it was not a question of mere lapsing of the fishery clauses of the Washington Treaty, but by their abrogation the provisions of the treaty of 1818 again came into force, and these had proved before to be pregnant with troubles and difficulties of the most serious kind, which arose out of conflicts under it of American and British fishermen.

Mr. Bayard stated that he was in favor of having the whole matter amicably arranged, but the United States government would rather not deal with the question in a piecemeal way with each of the colonies, but would rather deal with Great Britain for a settlement of the whole question. He asked Sir Ambrose to see the British minister, which he did, and after a discussion of the subject with him it was decided that they should communicate with the Governor-General of Canada on the subject. With regard to the question of Canada's trade relations with Newfoundland he thought the duties against the produce of others should not and would not be imposed by either. He was satisfied of Mr. Bayard's desire to effect a settlement of the whole fishery question. In the meantime he, Sir Ambrose Shea, deprecated the idea mooted in Canada of sending a cruiser to protect the fisheries, as such a course would only involve serious trouble.

Sir Ambrose Shea had an interview with Sir John Macdonald on the 27th inst. in reference to Reciprocity Treaty, and also with respect to Canada's trade relations with Newfoundland.
