NASAL BALM

TOTTENHAM, ONT., May 3rd, 1887.

I have been troubled with nasal catarrh for the last five years. Seeing Nasal Balm advertised I procured a bottle, and although I have only used part of it, I do not hesitate to pronounce it the best remedy in the world for that loathsome disease, Catarrh. It is easy and pleasant to use, soothing and healing in its action, instant in giving relief, removes and changes the poisonous secretions to a healthy state, stops the droppings from the head into the throat, and removes all the symptoms of Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In fact, if the directions are faithfully followed, nothing but a sure and permanent cure can be the result.

Yours truly,

JNO. S. GEORGE,

Baker and Confectioner.

CHAPTER XVI.

"Well, then—this Captain," said Brenda, "this Cleveland—"

"I knew it, by Heaven!" said Mordaunt; "my mind assured me that that fellow was, in one way or other, at the bottom of all this mischief and misunderstanding."

"If you cannot be silent, and patient, for an instant," replied Brenda, "I must instantly quit you; what I meant to say had no relation to you, but to another,—in one word, to my sister Minna. I have nothing to say concerning her dislike to you, but an anxious tale to tell concerning his attention to her."

"It is obvious, striking, and marked," said Mordaunt; "and, unless my eyes deceive me, it is received as welcome, if indeed, it is not returned."

"That is the very cause of my fear," said Brenda. "I, too, was struck with the external appearance, frank manner, and romantic conversation of this man."

"His appearance!" said Mordaunt; "he is stout and well-featured enough, to be sure; but, as old Sinclair of Qundale said to the Spanish admiral,

Farce on his face! I have seen many a fairer hang on the Borough-moor."—From his manners, he might be captain of a privateer; and by his conversation, the trumpeter to his own puppet-show; for he speaks of little else than his own exploits."

"You are mistaken," answered Brenda; "he speaks but too well on all that he has seen and learned; besides, he has really been in many distant countries, and in many gallant actions, and he can tell them with as much spirit as modesty. You would think you saw the flash and hear the report of the guns. And he has other tones of talking too—about the delightful trees and fruits of distant climates; and how the people wear no dresses, through the whole year, half so warm as our summer gowns, and, indeed, put on little except cambric and muslin."

"Upon my word, Brenda, he does seem to understand the business of amusing young ladies," replied Mordaunt.

"He does indeed," said Brenda, with great simplicity. "I assure you that, at first, I liked him better than Minna did; and yet, though she is so much cleverer than I am, I know more of the world than she does; for I have seen more of cities, having been once at Kirkwall; besides that, I was thrice at Lerwick, when the Dutch ships were there, and so I should not be very easily deceived in people."

"And pray, Brenda," said Mordaunt, "what was it that made you think less favourably of this young fellow, who seems to be so captivating?"

"Why," said Brenda, after a moment's reflection, "at first he was much livelier; and the stories he told were not quite so melancholy, or so terrible; and he laughed and danced more."

"And, perhaps, at that time, danced offener with Brenda than with her sister?" added Mordaunt.

"No, I am not sure of that," said Brenda; "and yet, to speak plain, I could have no suspicion of him at all while he was attending quite equally to us both; for you know that then he could have been no more to us than yourself, Mordaunt Mertoun, or young Swaraster, or any other young man in the islands."

"But why, then," said Mordaunt, "should you not see him, with patience, become acquainted with your sister?—He is wealthy, or seems to be so, at least. You say he is accomplished and pleasant;—what else would you desire in a lover for Minna?"

"Mordaunt, you forget who we are," said the maiden, assuming an air of consequence, which sat as gracefully upon her simplicity, as did the different tone in which she had spoken hitherto. "This is a little world of ours, this Zetland, inferior, perhaps, in soil and climate to other parts of the earth, at least so strangers say; but it is our own little world, and we, the daughters of Magnus Troil, hold a first rank in it. It would, I think, little become us, who are descended from Sea-kings and Jarls, to throw ourselves away upon a stranger, who comes to our coast, like the elder-duck in spring, from we know not whence, and may leave it in autumn, to go we know not where."

"And who may nevertheless entice a Zetland golden-eye to accompany his migration," said Mordaunt.

"I will hear nothing light on such a subject," replied Brenda, indignantly; "Minna, like myself, is the daughter of Magnus Troil, the friend of strangers, but the Father of Hialtland. He gives them the hospitality they need; but let not the proudest of them think that they can, at their pleasure, ally with his house."

She said this in a tone of considerable warmth, which she instantly softened, as she added, "No, Mordaunt, do not suppose that Minna Troil is capable of so far forgetting what she owes to her father and her father's blood, as to think of marrying this Cleveland; but she may lend an ear to him so long as to destroy her future happiness. She has not that sort of mind, into which some feeling sink deeply;—you remember how Ulla Storison used to go, day by day, to the top of Vossdale-head, to look for her lover's ship that was never to return? When I think of her slow step, her pale cheek, her eye that grew dimmer and dimmer, like the lamp that is half extinguished for lack of oil,—when I remembered the fluttered look, of something like hope, with which she ascended the cliff at morning, and the deep dead despair which sat on her forehead when she returned,—when I think on all this, can you wonder that I fear for Minna whose heart is formed to entertain with such deep-rooted fidelity, any affection that may be implanted in it?"

"I do not wonder," said Mordaunt, eagerly sympathizing with the poor girl; for, besides the tremulous expression of her voice, the light could almost show him the tear which trembled in her eye, as she drew the picture to which her sister,—I do not wonder that you should feel and fear whatever the purest affection can dictate; and if you can but point out to me in what I can serve, your sisterly love, you shall find me ready to venture my life, if necessary, as I have been to go out on the crag to get the eggs of the guillemot; and, believe me, that whatever has been told to you or your father, of my entertaining the slightest thoughts of disrespect or unkindness, is as false a fiend could devise.

Millions in Our Iron Mines.

Edward Kamper, well known in connection with the syndicate which desires to develop the mining industries of Nova Scotia, says steps have already been taken to examine deposits in Nova Scotia, several engineers have been despatched to that Province, and on their report will depend whether his company will spend some millions in plant. If they can come to an agreement with the Government, and the prospects are satisfactory, they might commence next spring. The syndicate he represents has works in St. Petersburg, where they employ 4,000 people; on the Spanish frontier, employing 3,600; and at St. Chammond, where they have over 7,000 at work. If his ideas were carried out Nova Scotia would become a second Pennsylvania. As a start they would bring out 2,000 French workmen with their families, but afterwards would employ Canadians as much as possible. They would be able to produce from 40,000 to 50,000 tons of iron every year, and he believed within two years could produce all the steel needed in Canada. He would be contented with a duty of $13 a ton, and proposed that the government, instead of giving railways a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, should order rails from his company and give them instead. The headquarters of the company would be in Montreal and all the directors would be Canadians.—Hx. Herald.

Personal Pickings.

George Westinghouse, Jr., the inventor of the air brake, is rated at $7,000,000.

Phil Armour's son, in the freshman class at Yale, has an allowance of $100 a week.

Signor Campanini says that he has been farming on his little estate near Milan for the last two years.

Commodore Joseph B. Hull is the oldest officer in the American navy. He has served seventy-four years.

Gen. W. T. Sherman is now counted as one of the regular first nighters at the theatres and other places of amusement.

Lieut. Henn is coming over again next summer with the Galatea, and hints that he may make the United States his home.

The Sultan of Turkey is attended by six slaves every time he makes his toilet, and the same six never perform the office twice.

King Charles of Roumania, reads all the proofs of his wife's stories and corrects them for the printer. A revise is then submitted to the queen.

The house selected by Postmaster-General Villas for his Washington home is in a fashionable quarter, adjoining Senator Sherman's. He paid $35,000 for it.

Edmund Sylvester, the founder of Seattle, W. T., and the oldest member of the Masonic Order west of the Mississippi, died in Seattle recently at the advanced age of 92 years.

Bishop H. B. Whipple, of Minnesota, has long locks like Buffalo Bill, and knows a great deal about the Indians in his section. He speaks several of their dialects, and has a great influence over them.

Gen. Grant's youngest son, Jesse R. Grant, has started for California to look after certain mining properties in which he has become interested through Julius Lezynsky. Mr. Lezynsky is a Pole, who has made money in Pacific coast speculations.

Prince Ronald Bonaparte, who married Miss Blanc, of Monte Carlo, has just returned to Paris from a tour through Corsica, where he has been visiting the birth-place of Napoleon I. A few years ago Prince Ronald and his mother and sister were living in a garret in most reduced circumstances.

Henry George's "Progress and Poverty" was among the books found in Count Tolstoy's table recently by Danileiski, the Russian writer. The Count, by the way, beats Gladstone's record in the way of physical exercise. Every day he either plows the ground, fells trees or chops wood to keep his health in trim."
