THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XIX.

So saying, Brenda submitted to her fate, and sat down, determined to listen with all the equanimity which she could command to the remaining part of Norma's tale, which went on as follows:—

"It happened on a hot summer day, and just about the hour of noon," continued Norma, "as I sat by the Dwarf's Stone, with my eyes fixed on the Ward-hill, whence the mysterious and ever-burning carbuncle shed its rays more brightly than usual, and repined in my heart at the restricted bounds of human knowledge, that at length I could not help exclaiming, in the words of an ancient Sage,

"Dwellers of the mountain, rise,
Troll the powerful, Hains the wise,
Ye who taught weak woman's tongue
Words that sway the wise and strong,—
Ye who taught weak woman's hand
How to wield the magic wand,
And wake the gates on Odin's steep,
Or lull wild Sunburgh's waves to sleep!—
Still are ye yet!—Not yours the power
Ye knew in Odin's mightier hour.
What are ye now but empty names,
Powerful trolls, sagacious Hains,
That, lightly spoken, lightly heard,
Float on the air like idle beads?"

"I had scarce uttered these words," proceeded Norma, "ere the sky, which had been till then unusually clear, grew suddenly dark around me, that it seemed more like midnight than noon. A single flash of lightning shewed me at once the desolate landscape of heath, morass, mountain and precipice, which lay around; a single clap of thunder wakened all the echoes of the Ward-hill, which continued so long to repeat the sound, that it seemed some rock, rent by the thunderbolt from the summit, was rolling over cliff and precipice into the valley. Immediately after, fell a burst of rain so violent, that I was fain to shut my pelting by creeping into the interior of the mysterious stone.

"I seated myself on the larger stone couch, which is cut at the farther end of the cavity, and with my eyes fixed on the smaller bed, wearied myself with conjectures respecting the origin of my singular place of refuge. Had it been really the work of that powerful troll, to whom the poetry of the Sealds is fabled to be? Or was it the tomb of some Scandinavian chief, interred with his arms and his wealth, perhaps also with his immolated wife, that what he loved best in life might not in death be divided from him? Or was it the abode of penance, chosen by some devoted anchorite of later days? Or the idle work of some wandering mechanic, whom chance, and whim, and leisure, had thrust upon such an undertaking? I tell you the thoughts that then floated through my brain, that ye may know that what ensued was not the vision of prejudice or prepossession, but an apparition, as certain as it was awful.

"Sleep had gradually crept on me, amidst my lucubrations, when I was startled from my slumbers by a second clap of thunder; and when I awoke I saw, through the dim light which the upper aperture admitted, the unshapely and indistinct form of Trolld the dwarf, seated opposite to me on the lower couch, which his square and misshapen bulk seemed absolutely to fill up. I was startled, but not affrighted; for the blood of the ancient race of Lochlin was warm in my veins. He spoke; and his words were of Norse, so old, that few save my father or myself, could have comprehended their import—such language as was spoken in these islands ere Olave planted the cross on the ruins of heathenism. His meaning was dark also and obscure, like that which the Pagan priests were wont to deliver, in the name of their idols, to the tribes that assembled at the Helgafelds. This was the import,—

"A thousand winters dark have flown,
Since o'er the threshold of my Stone
A votress pass'd, my power to own.
Visitor bold and holyer and glo,
And by every wild shore which the northern winds know,
And the northern tides lave,
But though this shall be given thee, thou desperately brave,
I doom thee that never the gift thou shalt have,
Till thou reave thy life's giver
Of the gift which he gave."

"I answered him in nearly the same strain; for the spirit of the ancient Sealds of our race was upon me, and, far from fearing the phantom, with whom I sat cooped within so narrow a space, I felt the impulse of that high courage which which thrust the ancient champions and Druidesses upon contests with the invisible world, when they thought that the earth no longer contained enemies worthy to be subdued by them. Therefore did I answer him thus:—

"Dark are thy words, and severe,
Thou dweller in the stone;
But trembling and tear
To her are unknown,
Who hath sought thee here,
In thy dwelling lone,
Come what comes soever,
The worst I can endure;
Life is but a short fever,
And death is the cure."

"The Demon scowled at me, as if at once incensed and overawed; and then, coiling himself up in a thick and sulphureous vapor, he disappeared from his place. I did not, till that moment, feel the influence of fright, but then it seized me; I rushed into the open air, where the tempest had passed away, and all was pure and serene. After a moment's breathless pause, I basted home, musing by the way on the words of the phantom, which I could not, as often happens, recall so distinctly to memory at the time, as I have been since able to do.

"It may seem strange that such an apparition should, in time, have gilded from my mind, like a vision of the night—but so it was. I brought myself to believe in the work of fancy—I thought I had lived too much in solitude, and had given way too much to the feelings inspired by my favorite studies. I abandoned them for a time, and I mixed with the youth of my age. I was upon a visit at Kirkwall when I learned to know your father, whom business had brought thither. He easily found access to the relation with whom I lived, who was anxious to compose, if possible, the feud which divided our families.

The Pacific Cable.

California papers are discussing the project of laying a telegraph cable from California to the Sandwich Islands, from which point it is proposed to lay a line by the Phoenix, Samoa and Fiji Islands to Brisbane, Australia, and another directly across the Pacific to the Bonin Islands, and thence north to Yokohama, Japan, whence a supplementary line would be laid to China. Upwards of twelve years ago, surveys of the Pacific ocean bed were made from the California coast to Japan, and subsequently from the Sandwich Islands to Brisbane, Australia. Since that time nothing practical has been done towards carrying out the undertaking as an American enterprise, either by the American Government or Congress, and its magnitude has deterred private capitalists from taking up the work. The business men of California are very anxious that a cable should be laid to the Sandwich Islands, with a view to its extension subsequently to Japan and Australia. From San Francisco to Honolulu the ocean bed is regular and readily adapted to the laying of a cable. Between the Sandwich Islands and Japan or Australia, swift currents and unevenness of the ocean bed in some localities were encountered when the soundings were encountered, which would prove serious obstacles to the laying of the cable; but by avoiding such localities a comparatively even bed and still water were found—the deepest sounding being 38,860 feet. When the marine surveys were made some years ago, the only serious difficulty discovered between California and China, by the route specified above was the Kuro Siwo, or black stream of Japan, where the water was nearly six miles in depth, and the current of extraordinary force and swiftness.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind. mar 17 cod & wky
