Bank Head Tells Canada All-Out Effort Required

By JAMES NELSON OTTAWA (CP) — Canada must employ its resources more intensively and adapt them more readily to domestic and world needs in order to keep up its rate of expansion. Governor Louis Rasminsky of the Bank of Canada reported Monday.

In his annual report to Finance Minister Gordon, tabled in the Commons, the head of the central bank said the international economic situation has been "singularly favorable" to Canada in the last few years. But this may not continue.

"We shall have to rely to an increasing extent on improving the adaptability of our growing resources in order to avoid serious bottlenecks and price pressures."

Mr. Rasminsky noted Canada was completing its fourth consecutive year of economic expansion, a period in which there were impressive gains.

The economy moved ahead vigorously in 1964. Real output of goods and services rose more than six per cent, and non-farm production by more than seven per cent. Employment increased substantially and unemployment was reduced. Productivity rose, private investment increased, and the deficit in current account balance of payments declined.

"The monetary policy of the bank in 1964 helped to maintain stability in Canada's external financial position and to enable the rising demand for credit associated with the growth of the economy to be satisfied without any tightening of credit conditions."

An important factor in the economic expansion was the reduction in the current account deficit in international trade to $450,000,000 in 1964. This compared with $1,250,000,000 in 1960.

"Even if one excludes the exceptional sales of grain to the Soviet Union, it is noteworthy that our current account deficit has not followed its historical tendency to expand during periods of rapid economic growth," the report said.

"While the international economic situation still looks reasonably favorable, some of the main countries with which we do business are in balance of payments difficulties or are concerned with the 'over-heating' of their economies and have taken steps to limit the expansion of demand."

"This suggests that gains from external factors may be more difficult to come by than has been the case in the last few years."

Mr. Rasminsky recalled that when the current expansion began early in 1961, there was a great deal of slack in the Canadian economy. Canada was able to increase output and keep the upward pressure on costs and prices moderate.

Now the margin of unused capacity has been considerably reduced and in some major industries there is some left. Shortages of certain types of labor skills have appeared in some areas.

"It seems clear that the absorption of the remaining amounts of unused resources in the country will be more difficult and that we shall have to rely to an increasing extent on improving the adaptability of our growing resources in order to avoid serious bottlenecks and price pressures."

The consumer price index rose nearly two per cent in 1964. This was relatively modest by current international standards, but "it underlines the need to do everything we can to improve the performance of the Canadian economy in the years ahead."

"ALL MUST PARTICIPATE" In order to increase productivity and competitiveness rapidly, all parts of the community—government, business and labor—must participate. They must show willingness to accept the need for change, and respond to it in constructive ways.

"Governments must give a lead. They have to be concerned with the effects of their policies on productivity, prices, and the country's international position."

"The rest of the community also has an important responsibility. Business must have the foresight, imagination and initiative to seek out and seize the opportunities that arise in a growing economy and to abandon old methods in favor of new, rather than look for increased shelter for traditional methods that have ceased to be competitive."

"The whole community—government, employers and employees alike—needs to recognize that the level of real income we can enjoy depends on our productivity and that the only way real incomes can be increased is through the more effective utilization of our resources."

"Unless we act in a way that takes full account of these facts there is danger that the effects made to obtain the high levels of employment that we need will be frustrated by serious price instability and balance of payments difficulties."

BANGKOK (AP)—China has made substantial economic progress on the basis of an agricultural recovery that led to industrial expansion, a United Nations survey asserts.

The economic survey for 1964 by the secretariat of the UN and the Far East was prepared for the commission's annual convention opening in Wellington, New Zealand, Tuesday.

Communist China is not a UN member. The survey contains a number of references to the Peking regime's economic position without giving detailed statistics.

The survey credits much of mainland China's economic progress to an agricultural recovery in 1963 and 1964 following disastrous harvests in earlier years.

This recovery, it says, led not only to an expansion of light and heavy industry but also to increased exports which it says had fallen by about one-quarter between 1959 and 1964.

"Mainland China gains most of its trading surplus from Hong Kong and Malaysia," the survey says. "By contrast, mainland China's continued large-scale import of grain from Australia, Canada and other countries was largely a one-way trade, and perhaps a temporary one."

"Largely because its trade with the Soviet Union has halved," PAID ARREARS

The substantial trade surpluses so achieved enabled the payment of the 1960 trade arrears to the Soviet Union and also to provide foreign aid to some African and Asian countries as well as to Cuba," he reports says.

The Soviet Union, however, still remained China's chief trading partner, taking one-fourth of its exports in 1963 and supplying about one-sixth of its imports, it says.

At the same time, it says, there was a steady expansion of Chinese-Japanese trade — explained by geography, China's present stage of development and Peking's "determination to replace Russian supplies."

Japan's exports to China leaped from $2,000,000 in 1960 to $20,000,000 in 1963 and expansion continued into the first half of 1964. Trade with Western Europe did not increase, the survey says, although it still accounted for about one-fifth of China's total trade and was closely balanced.

Margarine Bill Has 3rd Reading

Third reading was given in the Legislature yesterday to a bill to repeal the Dairy Industry (Provincial) Act, thus paving the way for the sale of margarine in the province.

To become law, however, the bill must receive Royal Assent by the Lieutenant-Governor. Bills are usually assented to at the closing of a session.

Agriculture Minister Andrew MacRae introduced a bill yesterday called the Margarine Act. This act is expected to provide regulations to control the sale of margarine, such as moisture and color content and types of packaging.

Two bills, promoted by Provincial Secretary J. David Stewart also received first reading. They are the Lucy Maud Montgomery Foundation Act and an act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

The reduction in liquidity was not such as to prevent the banks from continuing to follow strong leading policies, but it brought them to a position where their lending policies could be expected to be sensitive to any appreciable further decline in liquidity."

Bank loans rose 15 per cent. Long-term interest rates were sharply lower at the end of the year than at the beginning.

Private money holdings rose by 7 1/2 per cent. The total money supply, including government deposits, rose six per cent.

The Bank of Canada managed the growth of the bank's cash reserves in such a way as to reduce their holdings of government securities and other liquid assets.

Government House leader McIlraith said the volume of parliamentary translation work has more than doubled in the last year. Three teams of translators were working on the pension committee records, but it would be many days before the job was completed.

Deputy Speaker Lucien Lamouret at first ruled that the House committee of the whole had no authority to decide on a question of privilege. He suggested the Creditistes move a motion to enable the Speaker to take the chair and decide on a question of privilege.

The Creditistes drew rare support from the three other opposition parties for their complaints, and on the vote to move out of committee the government was defeated 61 to 52.

"A grievous oversight by the government" commented Conservative House leader Gordon Churchill. The delay in translating the report was "hardly fair to our French-speaking colleagues."

Tuesday was the 16th day of highly detailed debate on the bill since the session resumed Feb. 16.

Just before Mr. Ferron introduced his motion, the House completed detailed study of the 125 clauses in the plan and began a general debate on all aspects of the pensions issue.

The plan still requires third annual readings in the Commons, Senate passage, royal assent and proclamation by the cabinet before becoming law.

Health Minister Judy LaMarsh confirmed Tuesday that the government plans to implement the scheme Jan. 1, 1966.
