Do you find that exams are more stressful to you personally now, as a professor, or when you were a student?

1. 'Generally, I think its harder to write them, but sometimes its hard to set them too. You have to be in the right mind.'

Professor JI Dowling
Mathematics

2. 'It depends. As a professor you have to set up a fair exam to accomodate all of the students. That's the hard part. So it is harder; as a student you just write the test given to you.'

Professor M. Ali
Economics

3. 'No, but the faculty spends considerable time and effort in creating the examinations so as to provide a balanced spectrum of questions to cover the entire course.'

Dr. Singh
Anatomy and Physiology

4. 'There was definitely more stress put on me as a student then I have as a professor here. Exams were made up by the university, not my professors so we did not know what would be omitted.'

Professor C. Blouin
French

5. 'Yes, you have to get suitable questions that cover the material. Then you have to look at each answer to see if it is reasonable or if it could have been interpreted another way. Then there is time spent in marking and grading the papers, and then telling students the truth.'

Professor Ab. Ferris
