Sealskins. "The season is just opening," said a dealer in furs to a Buffalo reporter. "It promises to be a very busy one. Sealskins will take the lead in fur goods just as they have for years. Do you know, when sealskin saques were first introduced they were looked upon with great disfavor. The first sealskin saque ever made was, I believe, placed on exhibition in the store of A. T. Stewart in New York city in 1862. It was made very much like our present silk circulars. The richly dressed ladies who looked at the new garment made all sorts of comments on its appearance. One said it was too heavy, another said it was clumsy, and one lady declared it looked like faded calico. To-day they are all running wild to possess a garment made out of that sort of faded calico."

"Where do the majority of the sealskins used come from?" "From Alaska. The hunters, many of whom are employed by companies, pack the skin in casks, about sixty to each one, putting in plenty of salt to keep them. They are sent to San Francisco, thence via New York to London, where they are cured and dyed. I understand from a magazine article I was reading a short time ago that during September there were 1,477 casks of sealskins received in New York. This makes in all about 88,220 skins, quite a number for one week. The London people possess a secret method of dyeing that their American brethren have not yet and probably never will learn, that is, if the English dealers can help it."
