 food. Of course when they are not in season I have to eat other things."
 "It is the same way with me. I like Grasshoppers, and I eat a lot of them. If it were not so hot I would go out and catch a few right now," Reddy said.

 Once more Broadwing took to his wings. His keen eyes had seen the grass move a little distance away. A moment later he was back. He had a small Snake this time. Reddy nodded with approval. "I like one of those now and then myself," said he. "But I like Mice better."
 "Mice are good," agreed Broad-wing. "I catch a good many myself."

 "I never have happened to see you catching birds," said Reddy. "I seldom do," said Broadwing. "Some members of my family, Sharpshin for one, live almost all together on birds. I rather have Grasshoppers, Mice, Snakes and some insects."
 "It is much the same way with me," said Reddy. Give me all the Grasshoppers and Mice I can eat, and I don't care for much else. Of course, a young Rabbit, or a young Woodchuck, is good eating. And once in a while I get a bird. I see you have lost a feather from your tail."

Broadwing nodded. "I lost it the other day," said he. "It was one of those two-legged hunters. He had one of the dreadful fire-sticks. It is a wonder he didn't kill me. He tried to. It seems as if those two-legged hunters are always trying to kill me. I have to watch for them all the time."

"Me, too," said Reddy. "Winter and summer I have to watch. I can't go away for the winter the way you can. You can get away from those hunters."

Broadwing shook his head. "Wrong," said he. "Wherever I go I have to watch out. What they want to kill me for I don't know. I don't do them any harm. I don't eat any of their food. I catch the ones that do eat their food, like Grasshoppers and Mice. Yet they are always trying to shoot me," complained Broadwing.
 It was Reddy's turn to nod agreement. "I know," said he. "You and I have a lot in common. Those whom we have to fear most are the very ones for whom we do most. It isn't fair."

 "I'm beginning to get hot again," complained Broadwing. "I think I'll go up and cool off once more."
 Evidently Reddy Fox watched Broadwing out of sight.

GarWood
 REPLACED A STOKER and an OIL BURNER and SAVED HEATING DOLLARS

All over Canada, Gar Wood is establishing records for amazingly low oil consumption, typified by these two examples from Hamilton, Ontario. Your neighbourhood Gar-Wood Heating Specialist, listed below, can show you similar examples from this District.

Upper photo:—The Watson home, 275 Stinson Crescent, Hamilton. 37' x 21'. 7 rooms, 2 bathrooms, basement. Gar Wood replaced a stoker-fired furnace. Oil consumption for a full season was 715 gallons, costing $129.00—a saving of $26.00 over the annual cost of stoker fuel.

Lower photo:—Mr. C. Burdis, 976 Main Street, East, Hamilton, replaced another Oil Burner with GAR WOOD, to heat his home and store. 47' x 25'. 1st floor: Store, Dining Room, Stockroom. 2 Wash-rooms. 2nd floor: Living Room, Kitchen, Bathroom. 3rd floor: 2 Bedrooms. Mr. Burdis reports Gar Wood gives better results at a cost of $190.00 for fuel oil—an annual saving of $75.00 over the previous system.

Remember—with Gar Wood you secure, not only lower heating costs, but also maximum comfort, and freedom from heating worries for a lifetime. For so little more in price you get so much more in value and efficiency.

If you are replacing your heating system, or are building, consult your local Gar Wood Heating Specialist—It pays to invest in the best!
