

NEWS of the WORLD in PICTURES

New seat of Poland's government is reported to be Lublin, 100 miles southeast of Warsaw. In above picture, the Lublin city hall is at left.

Perfect accord seems to be the order of the day as Great Britain's three war chiefs beam with smiles as they leave No. 10 Downing Street, London, after a conference. Shown in front of "the heart of the British Empire" are left to right: Sir Edmund Ironside, Chief of the British Expeditionary Forces; Air Marshal Sir Cyril L. N. Newall, head of Britain's Air Forces, and Admiral Sir Dudley Pound, First Sea Lord.

Royalty as well as commoners in London carry gas masks with them in these days of war. Queen Elizabeth is carrying her gas mask case draped from her arm, holding her pocket book in her hand.

Welcome interlude in the hectic business of war. Polish troopers get their rations during temporary halt on way to the front. Picture, one of the first taken behind Polish lines, was passed by censor, rushed to U.S. by clipper plane.

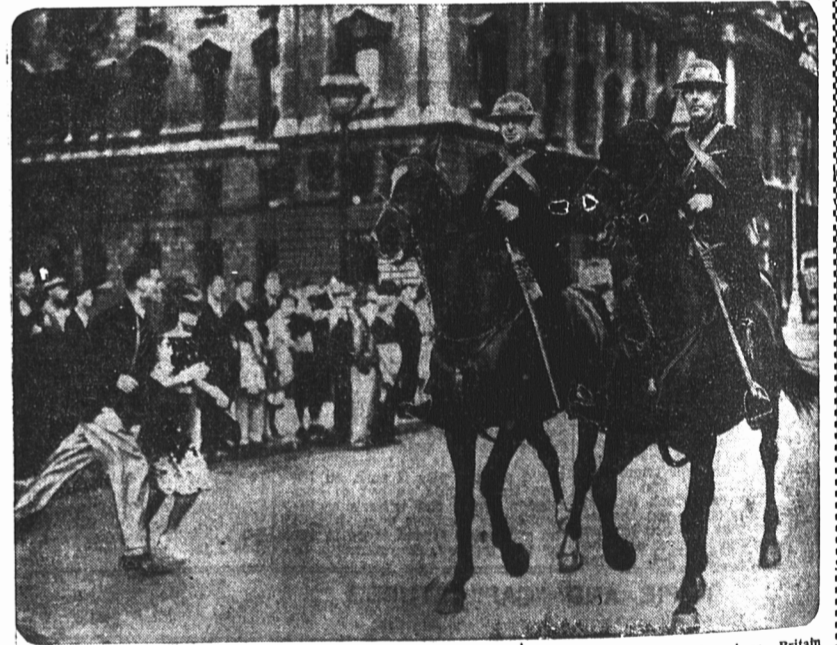

Returning to England from France with his Duchess, the former Wally Simpson, the Duke of Windsor, is supposedly to attach himself to a British regiment. The ex-king still holds Commission as Colonel-in-chief of the Welsh Guards, in uniform of which he is shown.

German mechanized units speed through the Polish village of Szczecow after military fire had battered the town into submission, forced Polish troops to retreat. Effects of the bombardment can be seen in the wrecked buildings above.

While Poland fights German troops deep within Polish territory, her special military commission, pictured in London, confers with British and French army commanders on the coordination of allied forces against Hitler's armies. Center, is Gen. Norwig Neugebauer, chief of the commission.

These mounted police, shown somewhere in England are wearing steel helmets since Britain went to war with Germany.

Part of the crew of the torpedoed British freighter Olivegrove is shown aboard the S. S. Washington drinking a toast to their rescuers. With their canary mascot, the entire crew of 33 was saved by the American liner about 200 miles southwest of Eanry, Ireland, where the torpedo sent the Olivegrove to the bottom.

Won Nazis' Tribute—A picture of complete despair after the surrender of Westerplatte, Danzig harbor fortress, the commander of the heroic Westerplatte "suicide squad" is shown leaning on the sword that his Nazi conquerors permitted him to keep as a token of their esteem.

Fighting Men—Guarded by Nazis, the heroic defenders of Westerplatte, Polish fortress in Danzig harbor, are pictured in a temporary prison camp. Germans were loud in praise of the eight-day defense of the fortress before the terrific bombardment from the sea and air forced surrender.