Souris Youths On Historic Voyage To Antarctic Base

A few weeks ago two young Antarctic adventurers from Souris, P.E.I., returned to their homes after spending almost six months on a history-making cruise to the Antarctic Continent via London, England.

The ship carried the Advance party of the Commonwealth Trans-Antarctic Expedition, led by Dr. Vivian Fuchs for the purpose of setting up an advanced base near the edge of the ice cap.

In a diary which he kept of the voyage, Jim said the ship sailed from Halifax, October 23, last, with very little fanfare, for London, England, arriving at Millwall Docks on November 3.

On November 14 the sturdy vessel headed down river amidst a tumultuous send-off by every whistle and voice within hailing distance.

The trip to Montevideo was uneventful and they completed the first leg of the voyage December 9. It was at Montevideo that the party was joined by Sir Edmund Hillary, the conqueror of Mt. Everest in 1953.

Leaving Montevideo the Theron continued her way along the east coast of South America, arriving at King Edward Island on December 16. The ship stayed at this place for four days and our wanderers had their first opportunity of visiting a whaling station in full operation.

On December 20 the momentous and nerve-wracking part of the voyage began when the Theron sailed for the Antarctic wastes. In a few hours the ship was threading its way through numerous enormous icebergs and on the second day when they encountered heavy packed ice, the Captain, Harold L. Maro, of Chester, N.S. a naturalized Norwegian-born seaman, personally took over the wheel to steer the ship through the ice.

By Christmas Day, they started to encounter ice having a depth of ten feet in which they were stuck solid for two days. It was during this time that our adventurers were given the opportunity to try their hand at seal hunting along with Sir Edmund. During the next five days they managed to make three miles bucking very heavy ice continually.

DRIFTING ICE

From December 25 until January 4 it was calculated that the ship had managed to steam about 1,000 miles on her own power, but the drifting ice was carrying them along at a speed of twenty miles a day.

On the seventh, Jim noted in his diary, the work of unloading was completed and the ship sailed on the homeward journey. On the way out much ice was encountered and the ship arrived at Grönviken on the fourteenth of February.

After an overnight stop at the latter port they then sailed for Madeira. All this time the weather had been getting warmer and the crew were taking every opportunity to soak in the sun and to acquire a tan.

The "Theron" arrived at Madeira after an uneventful trip on March 15 and the next day sailed for London. Despite the heavy weather and fog they managed to make very good time and were forced to anchor on two occasions so as to maintain the scheduled arrival at the Port of London.
