

New London
Players Present
Variety Concert

A variety concert was very successfully staged by New London players in the local hall, and later with equal success, for the enjoyment of several other communities.

Each part in the pleasing variety of numbers was well taken, and received a gratifying response from the audience.

Following is the program:
Instrumental music. Mrs. Wilbur McKay, Mrs. Lorne Campbell, Mrs. Jimmie Cole, Joe Wigmore, Blaise Dunning.

Chorus: Dear Hearts and Gentle People, by the cast.

Drill: Alice Blue Gown: 7 small girls: Edna MacEwen, Isobel Campbell, Anne Carr, Evelyn MacEwen, Audrey Mayhew, Linda Bernard, Elizabeth Adams.

Solo: Mrs. Wilbur MacKay (encore).

Monologue: A Trip to the Hospital: Tupper MacKay.

Dialogue: A Mouse to the Rescue: In which "Maise" played by Irma Campbell and "Jim" played by Nelson Roberts receive a telegram from "Aunt Jennie," played by Katherine Cotton, who is coming on a visit. She is wealthy but doesn't look it, and they are not especially pleased when they receive the telegram, and even less so, when they also receive a telegram from "Uncle Bob" (Harold Mayhew) who is about to visit them as well.

The young folk plan to get rid of the uncle and aunt, try to weary them with a round of night clubs, etc., but nothing daunts them. They go down town and stay so long that Maise and Jim are worried, but eventually return, all decked out in modern styles. They even take dancing lessons, and continue to live with the niece and nephew, who finally stage a hold-up to frighten them. Eric Carr plays the part of messenger boy and later of hold-up man. Even the hold-up man fails to scare Aunt Jennie. However, she does see something which frightens her and she jumps on a chair, screaming. Uncle Bob dashes to her rescue, claps a hand to her knee, and captures a Mouse. She calls him her hero, and he announces, to the amazement of the young people that he and Aunt Jennie are married. Now she insists on going home, for she will not stay "where there are animals like that at large."

Duet: Margaret Somers and Betty Graham.

Dance: Mrs. John Fyfe.

Instrumental music.

Easter Parade: 8 girls: Roma Somers, Betty Cole, Lorraine Cole, Nettie MacEwen, Kay Mayhew, Thelma MacPhee, Shirley McKay, Edith MacKay.

Intermission, sale of Candy.

Instrumental music.

Trilo: Mrs. Fred MacEwen, Mrs. Ralph Cobb, Mrs. Ross MacEwen.

Dialogue: A Great Catastrophe: By Juniors — David Bernard, Eric Mayhew, and Ivan Cole, is a restaurant scene in which the menu is changed from Mince pie to Cat pie, with dire results.

Male Chorus.

Hopscotch Polka — Shirley McKay, Kay Mayhew, Thelma MacPhee, Nettie MacEwen.

Dialogue — Don't tell a soul: Is played by nine ladies each of whom adds a little to a bit of gossip, which in the end turns out to have little foundation—Juanita MacEwen, Ella Adams, Bertha McKay, Evelyn McKay, Winnifred McKay, Margaret Cole, Judy Dunning (substitute, Beulah Mayhew) Edith Cobb, Hattie Bernard.

Song: Joe Wigmore.

Closing Lullaby: Isabel Campbell, The King.

Kensington Home and School Holds Meeting

The annual school debate was the feature of the program of the May meeting of the Kensington Home and School Association held recently. There was a good attendance of parents and visitors to hear the pupils of Grade IX and X debating the subject, "Resolved that the people of the 20th century are more ambitious than the people of the 18th century." The speakers for the affirmative were: June Semple, Patricia McDonald, Emma McMahon and Arthur Henderson and speaking for the negative were: Marlene Davison, Mildred Inglis and Henry Scales. The latter team won the debate by decision of the judges, Rev. S.J. Davies, James L. Saunders and Mrs. Ingham Jardine. In giving the decision Rev. Mr. Davies congratulated all the speakers on the excellence of their speeches and gave some helpful advice for future debating. Mr. Saunders added favorable comments and constructive criticism. A social hour was then enjoyed while the lunch committee served refreshments. —K
