Sir John Macdonald in England.

(From the Mail.)
In our last issue we published the speech of the Duke of Rutland, in which there was a reference to the prophecy of Sir John Macdonald concerning the rise of the fair trade agitation in England.
Events pass so rapidly now that Canadian readers may have forgotten what Sir John Macdonald said on that occasion. We therefore reproduce his remarks to the English deputation of merchants and manufacturers in August, 1880, as follows:
"Sir John Macdonald—The day may come, notwithstanding that free trade is a religion in England—I had almost said a superstition—(laughter)—when the logic of events will induce a modification, sooner or later; and if it does not come from above, it will certainly come from below."
"Mr. Birley—Then that will be your time. You had better establish your Zollverein when it comes."
"Sir John Macdonald—No person would be more unwilling than myself to see the hazardous experiment of taxing food; but in ten years, if our great North-West proceeds as we expect it will, we shall be able to furnish the food supply from that country to make up the deficiency in your home products which you now import from foreign countries. When that time comes, when we have a surplus and sufficient to supply the deficiency here, then we can talk of a Zollverein with England. We could, perhaps make a difference, say of ten per cent., between the products of England and the products of the rest of the world if he had a countervailing advantage in the English market, but I think not before."

That was spoken but a year ago, and in the course of the year that has elapsed an enormous impetus has been given to the agitation which Sir John Macdonald predicted. It has come both from above and from below. The artisans and their employers, the politicians and their constituents have alike been moved to the conviction that the conditions under which the main industries of the country are being conducted are unfair to all classes alike. Sir John Macdonald's prophecy has been in great part fulfilled, and the Duke of Rutland is probably not the only one who has recognized the fact.

Horse Worship.

The Egyptians, a recent writer remarks, mummied all sorts of sacred brutes. If Englishmen should ever take to the practice, notwithstanding the place that roast beef holds in English song and story, they would pass by the bull and swathe the dead horse in muslin and spices, for if the horse is not a god in England at least the cult of the horse is a sort of religion. The condition of the animals, their grooming, the cut of their manes and tails, the way in which they stand or step; these are matters to them of deep concern, of uneasy anxiety, not now and then, but every day—every time they ride or drive.
Nor do I mean only those gentlemen who drive mail coaches, hardy men, who are grooves in everything except taking wages. Apart from these there is a large class to whom the minutest points of equestrian turn-out is question of major morals. Indeed, in England there is a pedantry of the stable.
On all which one can only say, with the Scotchman who objected to whistling on a Sunday, that as to loving horses one might do far worse.

Cure for Car Sickness.

A simple cure is recommended for the trying malady of car sickness, which is as hard to endure as sea-sickness, and attended with even more inconvenience.
Ladies generally suffer most from this nausea. A journey by rail has for them all the discomfort and suffering that an ocean voyage has to the majority of travellers. A lady who had occasion to take a trip on the Lowell road—and she never travels by rail for pleasure—was, as is usual with her, as thoroughly sick as ever a landsman is on the "heaving deep" by the time she had ridden a dozen miles. The conductor of the palace-car, who was apparently familiar with such cases, told the sufferers' companion that a sheet of writing-paper, worn next to the person, directly over the chest, was a sure preventative of the trouble nine cases out of ten. He had recommended it to hundreds of travellers, and never knew it to fail. The lady was skeptical, but thought there would be no harm in trying so perfectly simple a remedy. For the return trip a sheet of common writing note paper was fastened inside the clothing as directed. Result: a perfectly comfortable journey, without a hint of the old sickness that had for years made travel by rail a horror. It was so like a superstition, or a happy accident, however, that the lady would not accept it as real until subjected to a more severe test. This came in a day journey to New York, and that hardest of all—a night trip in an "alleged" sleeping-car. Both were taken in triumph. The "charm" worked. The cure was simply wonderful—almost too good to be true.

Ladies on Horseback.

An American says:—"The number of ladies that are constantly (in England) on horse back in the parks, public and private, and on rural roads, is a distinguishing feature of the country. They ride in parties often alone, with a servant in attendance; but oftener, it seemed to me in pairs, with the inevitable tidy groom just out of earshot."
"There is not a more characteristic representation of English life, or more pleasing to a man, than the sight of two healthy English girls, well moulded in their neat riding habits, full of health, and their faces full of good nature, cantering easily through a wooded park.
Such Englishwomen sit their horses with an ease and grace that Englishwomen do not always show on foot."

The Fretful and the Cheery.

Some persons live in a perpetual fret.
The weather is always objectionable; the temperature is never satisfactory. They have too much to do, and are driven to death, or too little, and have no resources.
If they are ill, they know that they shall never get well; if they are well, they expect soon to be ill. Their daily work is either drudgery, which they hate, or so difficult and complex that they cannot execute it. In contrast to these are sometimes met with men and women so bright and cheery that their presence is a positive pleasure. They discover the favorable side of the weather, of their business, of home surroundings, of social relations, even of political affairs. They will tell you of all the pleasant things that happen and give voice to all the joy they feel. Of course they are sometimes annoyed and worried by petty troubles, but the very effort they make to pass them over silently diminishes their unpleasant effect upon themselves, and prevents the influence from extending.

For and About Women.

Two young ladies, Evangelina Butero, of Aqvi, and Carolina Magistrelli, of Mantua, who have been studying at the Roman University in Rome, Italy, since 1877, together with students of the male sex, have taken the degree of Doctor of Natural Science.

It is said that the private fortune of Queen Victoria amounts to $20,000,000, and she possesses an annual income of $3-250,000. Before her birth her parents were so poor that they had to borrow money to pay their passage to England that the expected princess might be born on British soil, and she remained in comparative poverty until she ascended the throne.
Mrs. Shaw, daughter of Professor Agassiz and wife of the Boston millionaire, has established over thirty free Kindergarten schools in Boston and the neighboring suburbs. She had busied herself so energetically in the work of founding the schools and collecting in them the poor little waifs of the city that her health has given way and she is suffering from a nervous prostration brought on by her exertions.

Saratoga belles do not wear the frizzy fringe so prevalent in England, writes a correspondent. There is one prevailing style, however, I have not seen elsewhere, viz., handkerchiefs, or scarves of hair, some six or seven of which are arranged on the forehead by dividing the front into so many divisions, and plastering it down at regular intervals with bandoline. A flat plait meets these, for there is a general disposition, I note, among the crowd to dress the hair rather high on the top of the head, combing it up from the nape of the neck.
Little girls up to three or four years old, instead of hats and bonnets just wear the white, close-fitting lace and muslin caps, tied under the chin, that infants wore in England. Sometimes these are made of soft silk or lace and are accompanied by a yoked pinafore or a Mother Hubbard frock sewn to a yoke, beneath which are five or six drawings having a crosscut puffing on the shoulders, the sleeves tight, a lace collar completing the picture of quaintness.

SINCE the death of the Grand Duchess Helena Paulowna the influence of women in Russian politics has been steadily diminishing.
The gap left in the society of the capital by the closing of the Micalha Palace has never been successfully filled, and its brilliant throng of statesmen, gathered without distinction of party, have found no similar meeting place.
The late Empress cared for nothing but religion; the Princess Dolgorouki had no ambition beyond the precincts of the winter Palace.
All the force of the Catherine's of old seemed to have been transmitted to the women of the people—Vera Sassoulitch, Sophie Perovsky and the self-styled Charlotte Cordays of the Russian revolution. But a special correspondent at St. Petersburg, discussing by cable the vexed question of the Dantzig interview, says that it was brought about mainly by the good offices of the Grand Duchess Marie Paulowna, Alexander III. lost no time in telling his uncle, in the memorable words which our correspondent reports, that he had inherited all the sentiments of his father. It was a pleasant triumph of feminine diplomacy.

Friends are believed to have been discovered in the United States Pension office at Washington, whereby the members of a ring have, by collusion with outsiders, made large sums out of fraudulent pension claims.
