

Religion and Life

By Very Rev. George C. Pidgeon, D.D., LL.B. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada (Copyright)

A young man was asked why he chose a certain position when another, perhaps more promising, was open to him. He answered, "I want to deal directly with people."

Nothing but persons and personality can make life real to any of us.

In speaking about love we mean the attachment of persons to persons. When we magnify Christian love as the queen of the graces we show our faith in its object which is to bring out the best in the beloved.

It often happens that the qualities which lead men astray are in themselves admirable. How often have we seen men socially gifted become slaves of drink; it was their social instincts uncontrolled which had proved their undoing.

There is a remarkable series of personal anecdotes in the first chapter of John's Gospel. (John 1: 35-51). There we see Jesus beginning His ministry by calling men to Himself for full-time service.

IN MEMORIAM

In fond and loving memory of MR. LEONARD J. PICKERING Died, June 19th, 1946. It is not at the time that the tears are shed That tell of a heart that is torn. But the lonely tears of the after years And remembrance silently borne, Surrounded by friends we are lone-some, In the midst of joy we are blue With a smile on our face we have heartache Longing "Dear Father" for you. We often pause to think of you, And think of how you died. To think you could not say goodbye, Before you closed your eyes. Inserted by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Thompson and Family.

and did bore on the preparation of these men for their future work and He took pains to make sure that they understood its bearing. Then on the very day on which He rose from the dead, He met with those men who had been made of them! The heroes of the Iliad are pygmies in comparison, and the conquerors of history feeble beside the Apostles. It is the person that counts with God, and if we put ourselves into His hands He will turn out vessels to honor, as the potter does with the clay.

Folks have wondered at Jesus' faith in God; His faith in men was even more remarkable. He trusted His reputation and His career to decent people like Andrew and Philip, but also to the despised of the land like Matthew and Zacchaeus and Mary, the Magdalene. Judas was the only one who let Him down. People still respond to trust, with trustworthiness. A young woman alone in a strange part of her city was frightened by some suspicious looking characters and appealed to a young man for direction. He escorted her to safety, and said as he turned away: "I had intended to run you, but you trusted me and I couldn't." Dangerous? Yes, but it often happens. A wounded survivor of the heroic Gloucesters trusted himself to the tender hands of his own people returned. We are surrounded by wealth incalculable in the ordinary mortal capacity for love and faith, and we are only following Jesus when we give them opportunity to help and serve.

What the ordinary person can become and do in Christ is the miracle of today. We say that we have no gifts nor learning and so can never amount to much anywhere. Peter was a fisherman when Jesus took hold of him, and so was John. But look what He made of them! The heroes of the Iliad are pygmies in comparison, and the conquerors of history feeble beside the Apostles. It is the person that counts with God, and if we put ourselves into His hands He will turn out vessels to honor, as the potter does with the clay.

There is a remarkable series of personal anecdotes in the first chapter of John's Gospel. (John 1: 35-51). There we see Jesus beginning His ministry by calling men to Himself for full-time service. He showed there His dependence on persons for the building of His Kingdom. He wrote no book; He had little place for wealth in His following; in fact, He called many to leave all and follow Him. The military forces by which Alexander the Great and Caesar built up empires He treated as a temptation of the devil. He depended on persons alone to win the world to God. As the Gospel story goes on, we see that everything that Jesus said

Rev. Roy D. Campbell

Born in Montreal, Roy Campbell spent his early life in the cosmopolitan atmosphere of the Canadian metropolis. Caught in the whirlpool of a great city's sin, he soon found himself in bad company and faced with disaster on life's course. This called for decision.

To arrive at the choice that was destined to change his entire life, God had to bring him to witness the tragic death of a drunken man and, by this graphic example, illustrate the folly of such pursuits. This gripping saga of God's dealing with Roy Campbell at the age of seventeen is a memorable part of all his campaigns. It is a story of a miracle of God's power. By tremendous Divine power, the Lord took a sinful young man of seventeen and transformed him into a Christian and a preacher all in the space of one week. Accepting Christ on a Monday night, confessing Him publicly on Tuesday, Mr. Campbell gave his first pulpit message on the first Sunday after his conversion and has not been out of the pulpit in the intervening years.

Gifted by the Lord with a remarkable facility for expression and a sincere appreciation of divine truth, his ministry soon carried into many of the foremost pulpits of Canada and the United States. After time out for academic training and an exciting period of army service, he spent three years in a successful Ontario pastorate. Having acquired the pastoral experience he deemed indispensable to successful evangelism, he recently returned to his first love and is now devoting his entire time to now devoting his conference ministry under the sponsorship of the Maritime Gospel Association. Rev. Roy Campbell will begin a series of evangelistic meetings in the Georgetown Baptist church on Tuesday, June 26 at 8 p.m. All are welcome.

COLLEGE DEGREES

The universities are closing and many young people are going out into the world. The graduation ceremony is but a step. The Americans call these exercises the commencement, and the term is quite correct for the graduates are beginning life. It is really an event in the student life. Some years ago I had a book sent me which I never able to acknowledge, for I did not know who sent it. It was the autobiography of Rev. John Spry, onetime minister of the Presbyterian congregation of Middle Musquodoboit, edited by his son in Scotland. The late Judge Benjamin Russell took it to the literary society at Dartmouth and read from it saying as he ended, Addison at his best could not beat that. I mention this book for it contained a remark which I have never forgotten. It was that nowadays we import two things from the United States, wooden clocks and doctors degrees.

Dr. Mac Mechan used to tell his students that they might go down town after graduation with their degrees and the business world pay little attention to them unless they had some resource of personality to back them up. A person may go through college and earn all they have learned; they might as well have gone in one door and out the other. Have they cultivated a taste for the best that has been thought and said in the world? Is their mind to a certain kingdom?

In his "Idea of a University", Newman says many good things about education and he puts high emphasis on the Arts course. He says that this course existed before the other faculties. The masters of arts were the ruling and directing bodies. The success of the faculties of law and medicine were considered as an encroachment, and were met with resistance. When colleges arose and became the medium of university action, the ascendancy of the arts faculty was confirmed, and down to this day, in those academical corporations which more than others have retained traces of their medieval origin. — I mean Oxford and Cambridge — we hear little about Law, or Theology, or Medicine, and almost exclusively of the Arts. He pleads for the classics, saying that they have been the instrument of education and the food of civilization; and he goes on to say that to strengthen, refine, enrich, the intellectual powers they are far superior to the study of the sciences. He declares also that real knowledge is not something which may be got up by reading a book, or which may be borrowed for the occasion, but it is an acquired illumination, a habit, a personal possession, an inward endowment. There is a knowledge which is desirable though nothing come of it, as being in itself a treasure, a sufficient remuneration for years of labour. Universities also confer degrees called honorary and bestowed for some signal service rendered in the field of education, professional service, statecraft or national defence, or some other outstanding achievement which shows that the mind has been magnified. Only does not get a grave in Westminster Abbey because he has made a fortune, but if he has done conspicuous service to the state. In that place where kings and queens for long have made their bed, those who have put soul above body, the spirit above sense, have gone to join the great. They all must in some sense come under the category of greatness. The habit of calling people who have been to college, doctor, is much more common in the United States than here in Canada. We have heard that the matter of geography has entered into the
