

Former Islander Enjoys Visit

Frank T. Stevenson who left Fredericton, P.E.I. thirty-three years ago to carve out a home in the bush three hundred and thirty-five miles north of Edmonton, Alberta, has been visiting on the Island with his wife, nee Edna Abbott, their daughter, Alice Jean, her husband and small baby daughter, are leaving by car this morning on return home a distance of thirty-six hundred miles. When Frank went to Alberta his nearest neighbors were seven miles away, but with outstanding courage he and his wife have made a fine home for themselves, raised a family of five children, and have seen Deboll grow to a progressive town, with churches, schools, and even a movie theatre. His wife is the district nurse in that vicinity. Frank's brother, Dr. Fred, who works for the U.S.D.A. and who is best known for his work in genetics came to the Island to meet his brother for the first time in forty-six years. Fred while here availed himself of the privilege of visiting the experimental station at Charlottetown, where he received the kindest treatment from R.R. Hurst, whom he has considered a close friend for years, and also from all the other splendid people of the staff. While here Frank and Fred visited their sisters, Mrs. Richard Enman, Victoria West, and Mrs. H.E. Bowman, Charlottetown, also Andrew Stevenson and family of Elliot and many other relatives and friends. They found the years have brought grey hairs to many of the old friends, but the smiles and friendliness were just the same. The greatest change they saw was the tremendous improvement of the farm homes. (Patriot Please Copy)

First Flagpole Sitter Dies

NEW YORK, Oct. 13 (AP) — Alvin (Shipwreck) Kelly, self-styled inventor of flagpole sitting and "the luckiest fool on earth," dropped dead on a midtown sidewalk Saturday night. The man who caused tens of thousands to crane their necks skyward to watch him perform drew a final crowd by his death. Under Kelly's arm was a scrapbook of his exploits. The title: "The Luckiest Fool on Earth." Clippings gave his age as 59, but police who inspected his papers said he was 67. In 1928, on a bet, he tried flagpole sitting 330 feet above the street, but an unsympathetic policeman forced him from his perch. The next year he was riding an airplane—clinging to a 10-foot pole mounted on the fuselage. In 1930 he mounted the lofty spire of a Broadway hotel and stayed there exactly 13 days, 13 hours and 13 minutes.

Moscow Conference Reveals Red Industry Shifting Behind Urals

LONDON, Oct. 13 (Reuters) — Industry since the Second World War. During that war, it was the Eastern industrial centres that forged the arms which gave Russia victory. Though military and strategic considerations are doubtless behind the decision to base heavy industry substantially in the east, Tevosyan did not give any reasons, according to reports of his speech, received here. However his statement followed previous declarations to the congress that: (1) Russia's economy can be geared to a war footing in the shortest possible time; and (2) the Soviet army now is equipped with new weapons greatly superior in quality to those it used in the last war. War Minister Alexander Vasilevsky, who made the latter statement, added that the new weapons had "sharply augmented the battle potentialities" of the Soviet army and had "changed the face of the army as a whole."

Parliament In Great Britain Reassembles

LONDON, Oct. 13 (CP) — Parliament reassembles tomorrow to put the final touches on an old session and prepare the way for the formal opening of a new one next month.

The reassembly follows a 10-week summer recess. In a sense, there may be an anti-climactic feeling about the renewed sittings, since no major legislation is expected and most members will be thinking of the state opening of the new session in November.

This will mark the Queen's first meeting with her parliament, in full ceremonial, and will be the first time the Speech from the Throne has been read by a Queen since the days of Victoria.

The sittings which open tomorrow are routine, to tidy up odds and ends of the dying session.

division's stand a "tremendous victory against superior odds." South Korean casualties were not announced, but were described as "considerable." Maj. Albert de Charleroy, U. S. adviser of the 9th, said "the Roks took a terrific beating" but refused to quit. "They fought hand to hand with bayonets, rifle butts and grenades much of the time," he said. "Then when the Chinese artillery broke in their bunkers and trenches they dug out and attacked again."

In Monday night's action, the South Koreans attacked three knobs, the last Chinese hold on the northwest slope of the two-mile-long ridge. Allied tanks, artillery and flare planes supported the drive. In desperation the Reds hurled a half dozen suicide attackers carrying satchel charges of explosives and Bangalore torpedoes—dynamite stuffed into pipe lengths. Machine-guns and rifles cut them down before the charges could be exploded.
