The bride, given in marriage by her father looked lovely in a floor-length gown of white net over satin and lace inserts. She wore a fingertip veil and carried a cascade of red roses.

Miss Daphne Shaw, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, while Miss Beryl Buchanan acted as bridesmaid. They both looked lovely in ballerina length gowns. Daphne wore pale yellow net over taffeta with matching

ELLEN'S DIARY

Blackie - Privileged And Respected At Alderlea

Thus it is a pleasant saga of the farms set down in this Island Winter, that so far January has written. Now Blackie our amiable dog, a privileged character and respected, who with the enthusiastic assistance of Scampie the pup takes care of us at Alderlea, stirs where he rests near the old armchair and in a gesture which declares "We're pretty good friends, aren't we!" moves closer to James. He snuggles his nose in James' hand, then satisfied that all is well, resumes his reclining position.

The younger farmer who had stopped by to chat with us at the close of his choring, has homed now to the house across the lane. What were the subjects of conversation? Among others, the farmers spoke with some concern of "that heifer in the second stall — she that 'doesn't seem to have the right appetite for her grain these days." They agreed that "with snow, and once she gets used to being hitched to a sleigh, that young mare should be as handy about as her mother was."

They talked of the herd-sires and found that "perhaps our own by and large, is a better animal than the new one acquired not many months ago. James compared the supply of fadders and grain on hand, with those in lofts and bins this time last year, and reckoned "even though the hay is getting down close to that beam in the mow if the winter's not too long drawn out, there should be enough to see the stock to the grass."

And before they parted, one suggested "If we should happen to get an early start tomorrow, we might take time to have a spell at the wood."

"Me-ow!" the black cat at the door begs softly to be let to the night. After an evening on the couch, the starlight invites him to roam. And now he has padded off on some feline excursion. Perhaps only to the coziness of the stables. Or maybe, as we have so often seen him go, down the shortcut of front meadow and along the dam to enter the quiet mill. To our query of "Whither bound?" he shrugged and maintained a stony silence.

Lights up stairs through the branches between, indicate that granddaughter and Mack are coming now to their beds — cozy as robin-fledglings in nests amid summery leaves.

Here in his armchair James reads, now and then breaking the companionable silence to share items with us. "I see," he comments "the scientists think the day of human space-travel isn't too far off — if things work out, as they plan. Here's one who won't be buying any of their tickets" he chuckles.
