FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Reade.

CHAPTER LVII.

WHEN Joseph Wylie disappeared from the scene, Nancy Rouse made a discovery which very often follows the dismissal of a suitor—that she was considerably more attached to him than she had thought.

The house became dull, the subordinate washerwomen languid; their taciturnity irritated and depressed Nancy by turns.

In the midst of this, Michael Penfold discovered that Helen had come back safe.
He came into her parlor, and beaming with satisfaction, told her of the good news. It gave her delight at first. But, when she had got used to her joy on that score she began to think she had used Joe Wylie very ill. Now that Helen was saved, she could no longer realize that Wylie was so very much to blame.

She even persuaded herself that his disappearance was the act of a justly offended man; and, as he belonged to a class of whose good sense she had a poor opinion, she was tormented with fears that he would do some desperate act—drown himself, or go to sea; or, worse than all, marry some trollp. She became very anxious and unhappy. Before this misfortune she used to go about singing the first verse of a song, and whistling the next, like any ploughboy, an eccentric performance, but it made the house gay. Now both song and whistle were suspended; and, instead, it was all hard work and hard crying; turn about.

She attached herself to Michael Penfold, because he had known trouble, and was sympathetic; and these two opened their hearts to one another, and formed a friendship that was very honest and touching.

The scene of their conversation and mutual consolation was Nancy's parlor; a little mite of a room she had partitioned off from her business. 'For,' said she, 'a lady I'll be—after my work is done—if it is only in a cupboard.' The room had a remarkably large fire-place, which had originally warmed the whole floor, but now was used as a ventilator only. The gas would have been stifling without it. As for lighting a fire in it, that was out of the question.

On a certain evening, soon after Mr.
Penfold's return from Scotland, the pair sat over their tea, and the conversation turned on the missing sweetheart. Michael had been thinking it over, and was full of encouragement. He said:

'Miss Rouse, something tells me that, if poor Mr. Wylie could only know your heart, he would turn up again directly.
What we ought to do is to send somebody to look for him in all the sailors' haunts; some sharp fellow—dear me, what a knocking they keep up next door!'

'Oh, that is always the way when one wants a quiet chat. Drat the woman! I'll have her indicted.'

'No, you won't, Miss Rouse; she is a poor soul, and has got no business except letting lodgings; she is not like you. But I do hope she will be so kind as not to come quite through the wall!'

'Dear heart!' said Nancy, 'go on, and never mind her noise, which it is worse than a borgan-grinder.'

'Well, then, if you can't find him that way, I say—advertise.'

'Me'cried Nancy, turning very red. 'Do I look like a woman as would advertise for a man?'

'No, ma'am; quite the reverse. But what I mean, is, you might put in something not too plain. For instance: if J.
W. will return to N. R., all will be forgotten and forgiven.'

'He'd have the upper hand of me for life,' said Nancy. 'No, no; I won't advertise for the fool. What right had he to run off at the first word. He ought to know my bark is worse than my bite by this time. You can, though.'

'Me bite, ma'am?' said the old gentleman.
'Bite! no; advertise since you are so fond of it. Come, you sit down and write one; and I'll pay for it, for that matter.'

Michael sat down, and drew up the following: 'If Mr. Joseph Wylie will call on Michael Penfold, at No. 3 E. C. he will hear of something to his advantage.'

'To his advantage?' said Nancy, doubt-fully. 'Why not tell him the truth?'

'Why, that is the truth, ma'am. Isn't it to his advantage to be reconciled to an honest, virtuous, painstaking lady, that honors him with her affection—and me with her friendship? Besides, it is the common form; and there is nothing like sticking to form.'

'Mr. Penfold,' said Nancy, 'any one can see you was born a gentleman, and I am a deal prouder to have you and your washing than I should him as pays you your wages; pale eyes—pale hair—pale eyebrows—I wouldn't trust him to mangle a duster.'

'Oh, Miss Rouse! Pray don't disparage my good master to me.'

Too Much Party Spirit,

(From the Montreal Gazette.)

Suggestions to the effect that party spirit ought to be dropped in the management of Canada's affairs are being thrown out every now and then. These deserve to be only pondered and resolutely acted upon, while the esse with which they can be accomplished is as encouraging as it is evident.

For many years past the Dominion has had a premier and ministers who have carefully husbanded the resources of the country, vigorously and consistently stood up for the interests of the people, sedulously avoided the very appearance of a scandal, and wisely and rigorously administered public affairs. During all three years the disturbances have been on a scale so economically prudent that the Opposition has never been able to object to anything but the most insignificant items of expenditure, and in most instances has not even carried its objections to the length of a vote.

Sir John Macdonald's personal character is above suspicion. The most embittered partizanship has never dared to call this in question. His soundness and reliability as a constitutional authority are universally acknowledged. He is emphatically a "safe" man, who has about him no rash, compromising impulsiveness, and at the same time no antiquated and unreasoning conservatism. With such a tried and thoroughly trustworthy premier, the legislators of the Dominion could have no better opportunity for giving practical recognition to the all but universal feeling throughout the country that partyism ought to have a rest, than by acceding Sir John Macdonald's administration a cordial and honestly discriminating support. The administration of affairs could not be in safer hands.

There are able and moderate men to the left of the speaker's chair. There is not the slightest reason why everything proposed by the one side should be contradicted and condemned by the other. If, accordingly, the members of the Opposition wish to raise themselves in the estimation of the general public and really to benefit the Dominion, they can in no way accomplish this more effectually than by seeking partizanship, cutting themselves adrift from provincial politics and combinations, cordially assisting such measures as come before the House and unflinchingly rallying to the maintenance of the best interests of this great Dominion.

Trichinosis in Germany.

The recent outbreak of trichinosis in several villages of the Prussian province of Saxony (says the Berlin correspondent of the London Daily News) has not failed to attract general attention, a special commission having even been deputed by the French Government to study the epidemic on the spot. Dr.
Stammer, a physician residing at the village of Emersleben, in the centre of the infected region, has just published the first detailed accounts in a scientific journal, from which we take the most interesting passages. Emersleben is situated about four miles from the district capital, Halberstadt, and numbers about 760 inhabitants. For many years it has been the custom in this neighborhood to use minced but uncooked pork as food in great quantities, the field laborers especially being accustomed to eat this meat spread on bread for their lunch.
This was again the case during the past summer. On the 14th and 15th of September last a large quantity of minced, uncooked pork had been consumed, the entire supply coming from the same butcher, at Emersleben. The first symptoms of the epidemic already appeared among some persons on the same day.
The first patients were treated on September 26th, and the last on October 15th. The total number was 257, of whom 50, or about 20 per cent., died.
The greatest number of deaths took place during the fifth and sixth weeks, when ten and eleven succumbed, respectively. The ages of the patients whose cases resulted fatally, ranged from twelve to seventy-six. The sufferers also included many children, the youngest of whom had not completed its second year, but they all escaped with their lives, excepting one boy of twelve.
Those persons who had eaten the pork after cooking or frying suffered for from two to three weeks from stiffness of the limbs and some swelling under the eyes, but none were obliged to keep their beds. All persons, however, who had consumed more than a quarter of a pound of the meat have died. Not one of the remedies employed by the physicians had the slightest effect.

—Earl Granville, on the 25th, directed the British Minister at St. Petersburg to ask an explanation of the Russian annexation of the Merv oasis, and at the same time to protest against the action as a breach of the assurances given to England by Czar Alexander. Besides extending an English protectorate over Belochistan, the Government proposes to send a military commission to Herat to ascertain the exact boundaries of Afghanistan and the condition of the border line defences. It will be its duty further to learn about the route between Serach and Herat, Balkh and other districts of the northwestern Afghanistan. The Indian council, after discussing a plan for the immediate occupation of Kandahar and Herat, have decided to occupy Kandahar. The Government has sent Lord Ripon instructions to re-inforce the garrison upon the northwestern frontier of India and send troops to Quetta and Kandahar. The English agent at Cabul is negotiating a new treaty with the Ameer, which proposes to give the Ameer further subsidies than those which he receives at present on condition of complete submission of foreign relations to English control.
