LAGOS, Nigeria (AP)—The Commonwealth Study Conference has agreed that the long-term objective for Africa should be a pan-African political union of the continent's independent states.
 There was, however, divergence of opinion on the timing and methods of achieving this union.
 A spokesman said the conference considered that all people who have made their homes in Africa, irrespective of color, should be entitled to citizenship in the Pan-African "supra state" provided they are prepared to accept complete equality with all others and identify themselves with the indigenous peoples' aspirations.
 That included white settlers willing to accept black Africans on terms of complete equality, but excluded those who practice apartheid and similar race discrimination.
 The spokesman described Ghana's attitude as advocating the need for African states to acquire a burning desire for Pan-African union, without which discussion of social, economic or cultural co-operation would be unrealistic.
 The spokesman said a group led by Nigerians insisted that they favor political union but argued that a practical basis of agreement, with the emphasis on economic co-operation, must first be achieved.
 The spokesman suggested that the Pan-African concept is a challenge to Ghana and Nigeria to spearhead a move for closer co-operation among West African states.

 The bidding:
 East South West North
 Pass 1♣ 1♠ 2♣
 Opening lead—two of hearts.
 You never look a gift horse in the mouth. If the opponents give you a chance to make a contract you're not entitled to make, you try to take advantage of it.
 North was obviously a not a graduate of the scientific school of bidding. He certainly had a good hand in support of diamonds, but his leap to six was surely an exaggeration of his values.
 He could have consulted partner about the possibility of a slam by jump-shifting to three clubs, and later supporting diamonds, and this would have done full justice to his hand.
 However, his optimistic leap to six turned out to be right when West chose a heart at his opening lead. If West had led any other suit, the contract would automatically have been defeated.
 Declarer had quite a problem to solve on the opening lead. The question was whether to play the ten or queen from dummy. He played the queen and made the slam, losing only a spade trick, but the reasoning behind the queen play is of more than passing interest.
 First, it should be noted that the play from dummy does not matter if either opponent holds the K-J. Thus, if West has both honors, the play of either the ten or queen is equally successful, while if East has both honors, neither play can succeed.
 Declarer's play is of importance only when West has the king and East the jack, or when West has the jack and East the king. In the former case, only the queen play wins; in the latter case, only the ten play wins.
 The only clue to guide declarer to the correct play are the bidding and the opening lead.
 South has a right to assume that West would have led a spade if he had held the A-K of that suit. Declarer therefore reasons that West has only one of the top spade honors and that consequently West is much more likely to have the king of hearts for his overall. Accordingly, South plays the Queen from dummy.
