RED AND CRIMSON CLOVER VALUE OF THE SCARLET VARIETY IN SANDY SECTIONS.

Good as a Manure Crop—Farmers Who Cannot Grow the Old Red Clover Find a Firm Friend in the New Substitute.

Too much value cannot be placed upon the new clover, which is destined to revolutionize farming in certain sections.
Scarlet (or crimson) clover has been tested and found equal to all the clovers now in use. It was introduced into this country about 20 years ago, and for a while was only known in Virginia and North Carolina, but its fame began to spread, until now it is well known in all sections. It can be easily recognized from the red variety, its long, pointed seed heads being in strong contrast with the round heads of red clover. It seems to thrive well in Delaware and New Jersey, especially on lands that cannot grow the red, and the farmers of Delaware are now engaged in growing it to a large extent, principally for seed, but wherever it has been sown for hay it has given excellent results. It grows very rapidly, so it can be cut earlier than red clover, and stands the severest winters remarkably well.

ADVANTAGES OF SCARLET CLOVER.
Those who have grown red clover are aware of the fact that it is a bi-annual. That is, the seed is sown in the spring of one year and the crop is mowed the second year. Scarlet clover is seeded down in the fall, occupies the land during the winter, and starts off early in the spring, the same as rye, and matures its seed in May or June, according to the location. It thus occupies the soil at a period of the year when the land is not required for other crops, and being seeded down in the fall it can be used on land that has but recently produced a crop. In many instances, it has given good crops by simply sowing the seed on top of the ground with out any preparation of the soil at all, especially in August, among the stalks of standing corn, as it soon germinates and begins to make growth, completely covering the soil and giving it a green appearance.

AS A SOIL RENOVATOR.
Scarlet clover will never be able to displace the old and well-tried red variety wherever the latter can be grown to perfection, but it proves a gold mine to farmers whose farms are not adapted to the red. It can be plowed under in May, in time for planting corn, and its stalks, leaves and roots add both humus and nitrogen to the soil. It may be added here for the benefit of those who may give scarlet clover a try, that it will be an advantage to use lime on the soil. Wood ashes are also excellent, but lime is cheap and can be easily obtained. The seed is for sale by all reliable seedsmen, and it is as a rule, pure and free from the seeds of weeds.
Grow it as a manure crop and use plenty of seed, so as to have the land completely covered with plants. It is also an excellent hay crop, and if cut before it heads out will afford several cuttings during the season, being an excellent early mowing crop for cows, as well as being much superior to rye.

USED WITH COW PEAS.
It may be repeated here that this is an excellent time to use cow peas in connection with scarlet clover. Plow and harrow the land, sow two bushels of cow peas broadcast, roll the land, and when the pods of the cow peas are about two inches long, turn them under, using a chain before the plow; roll the land, sow the scarlet clover seed and brush it in or roll again. When turning the peas under, and just before rolling the land, apply 25 bushels of str-awed lime per acre. The combination of cow peas and clover, though causing the loss of the use of the land for the season, will cause a gain in fertility that will amply compensate for the time and labor bestowed.

FOR PRACTICAL FARMERS.
Hints on Many Subjects Relating to Their Work.

The sudden change in the weather last week, from warm to cold, should admonish those who plant seeds of tender plants that there is always a risk of so doing if the planting is done before the pods of the cow peas are about two inches long, turn them under, using a chain before the plow;
awed lime per acre. The combina-

A noon rest for work-horses should not be neglected to short a period of time. It is better to get the teams out early and give them two hours' rest during the middle of the day than to drive the horses too hard with the heat of the sun is oppressive.

Beets are hardy and not injured by cold weather. The tender varieties for the table are luxuriant if grown rapidly and used before they become too large and woody. The seed is sometimes slow in germinating, but all va ant spaces in the rows may be filled up by trans-planting with plants that are growing together too thickly.

Give the trees plenty of room. There is nothing gained by planting them closely together. There may be an apparent saving of space when the trees are young, but there will arrive a time when the trees will be affected by the crowding. The roots extend to great distances, feeding over a large area, and any restriction in room will prevent growth and lessen the supply of fruit.

Plant a green crop, either of corn, oats, peas or millet, to cut during dry weather when grass may be scarce. A small plot of green food will be found very convenient, and will also assist in providing a change of diet. It may be relayed by all classes of stock. It may be cut at any stage of growth required.
