For 20 Years
 the formula for making Scott's Emulsion has been endorsed by physicians of the whole world. No secret about it. This is one of its strongest endorsements. But the strongest endorsement possible is in the vital strength it gives.

Scott's Emulsion
 nourishes. It does more for weak babies and Growing Children than any other kind of nourishment. It strengthens Weak Mothers and restores health to all suffering from Emaciation and General Debility.
 For Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Weak Lungs, Consumption, Blood Diseases, and Loss of Flesh.

THE BRITON.
 Though why one should have called him "The Briton" is more than I know. He was Irish enough, and when the rheumatism, as he called them, got into his bones he was exceedingly likely to lose his temper, and resent "The Briton" to the extent of hauling his traducer.
 But "Briton" he was and "Briton" he always had been, even when he sought for and secured the job of head grazer digger at Calvary Cemetery—a position which he held for him the rheumatism in the first place.
 Mario, the Italian, had moved over from the west side and was lounging along Folk street, one night sniffing from his nostrils the odors of the muddied and littered pavement.
 He had told her to stay at home not even the grocery basket, palpably laden—though it had given her no money for provisions or anything else—would excuse that failure to obey.
 He planned to follow her. He would follow along till she spoke to some man. Then he would "smash" her, and devote a pleasant and leisurely moment to exterminating the man. He would put an inferior weaver in the dark corner where she had been.
 Men were tearing down the aged-rail next door, but he knew it less by watching them—for she took no time from her work—than by shifting lights and the notes that assailed his window.
 She slept with a German girl in the weaving room, and the drama of each life was hid from the other, for their behind him, and his eyes were roaming. So she caught him by the arm and pulled him up out of the stream. She knew he was Irish, but what did she care?

 Was not her ticket in her handkerchief? Was not she going home? She laughed in his sober face, for her heart was full.
 And just then came Mario. True, he and "The Briton" at about the same time, and his soul was swayed by conflicting ambitions, but he calculated he could be found again, while all his meetings with the Irishman had been ad-journed without day.
 And yet, as he stepped from the perpetually muddy pavement he could not but think of the girl, and harbor plans for her chastisement.
 But pugilism, even of the informal kind, is a jealous mist, and Mario lost his first advantage when he turned for that last malevolent glance. And then "The Briton" had him.
 The conflict did not last long. Mario felt his feet leave the ground, and try as he would, he could not get them down again. He tried to break the Irishman's hold with one wild wrench, but he failed.

And there he stayed for a moment, at a man's arm length in the air, silent and motionless for the fall. But when he fell and struck on his back and lay there.
 "The Briton" watched him a moment, then retreated to the pavement, making an Irish brot as a plan of triumph.
 But the cry of delight behind him stopped the words on his lips, and he turned to find two small arms flung round him.
 Still, he knew "the levy," and he caught the Roman in her broken words. He held her away, mindful of sultitos until she said:
 "You have savada me. I will stay with you."
 Blood was flowing from the one lone mark on his face, where Mario's hand had landed, and she flung her handkerchief open and swathed the wound.
 What cared she that a precious bit of paper with a pictured seal on it fell fluttering to the ground?
 Mario was picked up and taken to a hospital. When he left it, the funeral was attended by a large number of men who had never seen Mario in health, and by a smaller number who had inadvertently met him when his health was altogether too good. His local train carried the man who had been laid out and enjoyed themselves.
 The head grave-digger stood by the little mound, just as he had stood by the thousands others. Only the priest and the pallbearers were there, and when they had gone to join their friends in the resort outside till the dawn train should take up their funeral car he shoveled in the earth, not knowing whom he was covering.
 The weather was good for a month after that, and he never went back to the levy. But in August a chill rain came, and he laid off for another bout with his enemy.
 He did not find him, and he asked a stout German girl who sat at the foot of a stairway. The German girl shook her head, and the carpet weaver held his two hands palms upward, while his brows were lifted.
 Far back in the better streets he met Terita, and she greeted him joyfully. He returned her handkerchief, washed but wrinkled with much carrying.
 She knew how much trouble she could make for this man by a word to Ward and Finn, but she did not say it. Mario was gone, and could never come back again; but little "the" reck if they'll let him sleep on in the grave where "The Briton" had laid him.

Keep This in Your Hat.
 Keep in touch with the young. Join in their games, be a partner in the dance, romp the fastest and turn the quickest in the Virginia reel or the contra dance; go up to the old college and sit down and light your pipe and sing college songs; take the children to the theatre and howl with them at the roaring farce and laugh with them at the comedy and cry with them at the tragedy; be their confidant in their love affairs, and if they are not equal to it, write their love letters, and never stop writing some for yourself.—Chauncey M. Castoria destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.
Castoria.
 "Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
 Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass.
 "Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will make Castoria instead of the various nostrums which are d. straying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other harmful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
