

War Veteran Plies Unusual Trade

One of the strangest jobs in the Canadian Army during the last war was held by Cpl. Albert Graham who was a saw beater and held the title of Saw Doctor A after he had fully qualified in the Sheffield Saw Shops in England. Now plying his trade from coast to coast in Canada, Mr. Graham arrived in this Province for his first visit and immediately was asked to fix the many saws lying idle in mills here. He is the son of the late Hughie Graham, a native of West Devon, P.E.I., who left the Island many years ago and settled in Cabano, Que. Mr. Graham has had the pleasure of meeting many of his relatives since arriving. In discussing his work he speaks in highly technical terms of rim speeds in relation to the proper tension and usually remarked that all rotary saws stretch on the rim at high speeds. Then he noted that if the blade of the saw did not stretch to the saw would wobble and could not do a proper job. His task is to tap them with a hammer in the right places to restore the tension required. A delicate touch is needed for the task and a thorough knowledge of the work. Mr. Graham expects to be here for another week or two as he wishes to visit all parts of the Province and meet more of the relatives he never knew before.

The Pacific region had the greatest comparative increase, jumping 8,518,173 tons from 6,542,523 in 1951. Bulk of Canada's waterborne trade was with the United States and the United Kingdom, which together accounted for 62.3 per cent of total exports and 80.9 per cent of total imports.

Fire Scare On Parliament Hill

OTTAWA, Sept. 1.—(Special)—Senior officials of the House of Commons woke with a start from their afternoon siestas at four o'clock today when fire alarm gongs banged out in the marble corridors of the Parliament Buildings here. They settled down a few minutes later when the clanging bells turned out to be a false alarm from the library of Parliament, caused by crossed wires on the switch panel. Ottawa city firemen roared up to "the hill" in scarlet hose-trucks, and a helmeted fireman rushed into the building with a chemical extinguisher only to find that no fire was there. Staff of the Parliament Buildings has been extremely sensitive about fire alarms since August 4, 1952 when a mysterious early morning fire gutted the dome of the fine old library building and caused heavy damage to scores of thousands of books. P. A. Hardy, librarian of Parliament who was deeply worried over possible damage to the priceless carved panelling of the library's interior, raced from his temporary quarters into the now vacant library. He was followed by his staff and by T. Montgomery, deputy clerk of the Commons and protective staff chief P. Jeanvieve. Oblivious to the arrival of fire apparatus and excited officials, work crews dismantling old woodwork on the ground and basement floors of the library, kept on at their jobs. The building is now thoroughly renovated and fire-proofed at an estimated cost of $1,000,000.

a note handed to the Italian foreign ministry in Rome, following three days of tension over the Trieste issue. Tito's government served notice that, if necessary, it will place the question of future relations between the two nations before a "competent international forum," presumably the United Nations.

The official Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, which published the text of the protest note here, said Monday night that 25 armed Italian soldiers penetrated Yugoslav territory. An Italian spokesman in Rome described the report as "absolutely false."

Tanjug alleged Tuesday that Italian motorized and armored units were moving into positions even in tiny villages along the frontier.

Believes U. S. Making A-Bombs At Top Speed

By Douglas B. Cornell
WASHINGTON, (AP)—Lack of official alarm over Russia's latest atomic explosion appears to be based on a possibility that atom bomb production in the United States has hit a peak and that vast improvements in triggering the hydrogen bomb are on the way. One person with a knowledge of atomic development said Tuesday that the reason to believe the United States is stockpiling bombs at maximum speed, that fissionable material is being turned out at the greatest rate possible with present equipment and every particle of it is going into weapons.

paign speeches. The government press office claimed it had learned of the plot from some of the 4,500 Red agents arrested as they entered West Germany with forged visas in the last four days.

Emergency Alarm

Fighting frantically to halt the mass invasion of Red agents, the federal government ordered its entire police force into emergency alert status akin to martial law. Every train, coming from East Germany was checked and hundreds were arrested on nearly every train. Reinforced frontier patrols caught other hundreds trying to sneak across the border by night. Western observers said the Communists have no hope of winning any power in the new Parliament, and apparently have turned to sabotage and rioting—anything to weaken, discredit or if possible defeat the pro-Western Adenauer regime. The planned government suit against the Nazi-like German Reich party will be based on the charge that the party's aims and officials and the behavior of its membership violate the constitution. The DRP already has been ruled off the ballot in three of the republic's nine states, and two of its top candidates were barred from the race. But it still is the main rallying point of rightwing radical elements trying to start a Nazi revival.
