Fergus, April 6, 1894

To Robert Phillips, Druggist, Fergus.

This is to certify that I have suffered from piles for a long time and tried several articles recommended for this complaint, but none of them benefitted me till I tried Chase's Ointment, which has completely cured me.

MRS. JOHN GERRIE.

R. Phillips, Jr., Druggist Witness.

"My six-year-old daughter, Bella, was afflicted with eczema for 24 months, the principal seat of eruption being behind her ears. I tried almost every remedy I saw advertised, bought innumerable medicines and soaps, and took the child to medical specialists in skin diseases, but without result. Finally, a week ago, I purchased a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and the first application showed the curative effect of the Remedy. We have used only one-sixth of the box, but the change is very marked; the eruption has all disappeared, and I can confidently say my child is cured. (Signed) MAXWELL JOHNSTON

PENELOPE PAINE'S ELOPEMENT.

At 30 one is popularly supposed to have arrived at years of discretion, and to be fairly in possession of one's faculty of choice. In the case of every accepted truth, which may have become axiomatic to the rest of humanity, there are always those who reject or affect to reject its teachings.

A very sturdy opponent to the proposition first set down was Mr. Phineas Paine, a hard-headed and successful grocer in the Town of Caresville. Mr. Paine, it is true, did not deny the proposition generally, but signified his denial by his conduct towards his daughter, Penelope, who had arrived at the age mentioned in single blessedness.

If there ever was a woman in the end of the 19th century who had cause for complaint on the score of repression it was Penelope Paine. Her mother had died when she was five years of age, and her father, possessed by the idea that he knew how to bring up a child right, had immediately begun the systematic course of repression that made his daughter a demure, timid little girl and a meek, spiritless woman.

He had kept down all her youthful joyousness by straight-laced rules of deportment, and had religiously checked the development of any natural tendency. People looking at her would say :—

"That girl looks as if she had been boxed up all her life." And in a measure, she had been.

But Penelope, prim as she was, grew to be a fair woman to look at, and, in spite of the difficulty of approach, she had many stealthy admirers. The grocer was, in his way, a social man. That is, he liked to have some one to listen while he gave his views and opinions, and at first the young men would affect to be coming to see him. But the moment they were so imprudent as to let it leak out that Penelope was the real object of their attentions, they were summarily dismissed.

"I just won't have it," the old man would say.

"Young folks don't know what's good for themselves, and they need the guidance of some older head to keep 'em out of mischief."

Penelope never seemed to care much about her beaux or the loss of them till Ned Holburn began going there. He kept a feed store and was a brother Oddfellow with the grocer, so the old man liked him pretty well.

Penelope was clerking in the grocery as she had been doing ever since she was old enough to tie up a package of sugar, but she always left an hour earlier than her father, so as to be at home and get his meals for him, for Mr. Paine's hard-headed frugality forbade his keeping "a girl," albeit he was abundantly able to do so.

It was during these happy intervals of time, when Penelope was entirely alone, that Ned Holborn was wont to steal a few minutes away from his store and unceremoniously drop in for a short chat. It was the first of such pleasure that the girl had ever known, and these stolen moments had come to be inexpressibly sweet to her.

She knew that her father would not have approved of this intimacy between Holburn and herself, and for that reason, at first, she took a shy delight in it. For with all his repression, the hard-headed grocer had not succeeded in crushing out of his daughter that touch of romance which is in the nature of every woman.

But there came a time when there was more than the romantic secrecy of the affair to give it charm. The intimacy had ripened into love. The young man had placed his honest affection in the keeping of the quiet, demure girl and she had given her heart unreservedly in return.

And as the days went on the stolen meetings grew sweeter and sweeter to both, and Philip Paine measured his pickles and weighed his pounds in blissful ignorance of what was passing. But the state of affairs got to the ears of a jealous rival of Holburn's, and a word to the unsuspecting grocer brought him up standing. The scales fell from his eyes and shortly after the lovers were surprised to see him walk into the house in the midst of one of their tete-a-tetes.

Of course there was a scene. The old man stormed and Penelope wept, but staunch Ned Holburn stood up like a man and "faced the music." He told the old man that he loved his daughter, that his love was returned and she had promised to wed him, and the end of it all was his dismissal from the house and a peremptory command never to return.

And Phineas Paine was grieved, for after all these years of confidence his system had proved to be at fault. In spite of all his repression he found that his daughter was not well brought up, and when she had been brought to the test had fallen signally.

After this the old man was his daughter's shadow. He never allowed her to leave his side. Necessity checkmated frugality and he hired a housegirl to take care of his furniture and get his meals.

In vain poor Holburn sought for a chance to talk with his sweetheart. She was as effectually shut away from him as if she had been immured within the four walls of a convent. Ned groaned in spirit and the grocer chuckled within himself.

Every glance that he got at the young man's discomfited face was a tribute to his own triumph.

But no one state of affairs can last for ever, least of all such a strained one as this. It has been said before that Mr. Paine was an enthusiastic Oddfellow, and it was his devotion to the duties of that order that first made him relax his vigilance. It was to be a banner night, with the initiation of some ten or a dozen candidates as its leading feature, and in the depths of his inmost soul the old man longed to go. But prudence said no. Painfully he argued it out with himself. Was his duty to the lodge less important than his duty to his daugher?

Then visions of the society in session and the frightened candidates came before his eyes. He laughed to himself for this hardened old tyrant had not lost all his taste for fun. But Penelope passing through the room made him sober again as he thought of all the possibilities that might arise from leaving her alone. Then his apologetic mind said :—"One night can't do any harm. You can leave her alone this one time and, after all, Ned Holburn will be at the meeting, too; he'll want to see the men initiated." He hesitated and was lost, and, after seeing Penelope securely locked in, he got off for his lodge.

But love has won the reputation of laughing at locksmiths and, embodied in the person of Ned Holburn, he went knocking at Penelope's window. Something in the character of the tap or some subtle intuition which only love inspires told her who it was and she forgot her timidity enough to raise the sash and opened the shutter a little.

"It's me, Ned," said the ungrammatical Holburn, eagerly, and there was a note of deep pleading in his voice as he added :—

"It's our only chance, darling. Get your hat and climb out of the window. I've got a chair here for you to get down on."

Penelope said nothing and through the darkness her face was not visible, but a moment's pause told him that she demurred.

"You won't refuse me, little one," he pleaded. "This will be our last chance and if we let it slip us we shall be separated forever. You can trust me, dearest; don't hesitate any longer."

Penelope went away from the window for a moment and when she returned she had her hat tied on and a shawl thrown about her shoulders. Her heart was beating very swiftly as she stepped out of the window on the chair and into the arms of her waiting lover. Holburn was a thorough-going fellow and he had his buggy waiting at the fence. They got in, he exultant and the girl all tremulous, and away they went across the river to the old minister, who was already famous for marrying runaway couples from three counties.

In the meantime the grocer, not finding Holburn, who was a regular and devoted attendant, at the lodge meeting, had grown uneasy and suspicious. A vague foreboding, which gradually grew into a terrible fear, filled his mind. When he could endure this suspense no longer he was excused and started for home. He had hardly entered the yard when an open shutter flapping listlessly on its hinges arrested his attention and his heart sunk within him. Penelope, he thought, would never leave a shutter that way under any conditions. The key gave forth a hollow, lonesome sound as he turned it in the lock and the sound of his footsteps on the floor was altogether weird and unusual.

"Penelope," he called, with a trembling voice, "oh, Penelope!"

But only the echoes answered him, and the unwelcome truth thrust itself upon him that Penelope was gone. He went outside and sitting down upon the step bowed his head in his hands. Just then the sound of wheels fell on his ear and a buggy was driven up and halted at the gate.

Then a man helped a woman to alight. The grocer recognized her and ran down the steps, crying :—

"Penelope, Penelope, ain't you ashamed—you've been riding——"

But here the voice of Holburn broke in :—

"We're married," he said.

"Huh!" cried the old man.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, well, Penelope Paine——"

"Holburn," said Ned, proudly.

"Penelope," went on the old man, ignoring his son-in-law, "I never would have thought it of you."

The girl was silent, frightened and tearful.

"And you, Ned Holburn, to think of you being a brother in the same lodge and all of that and then playing me such a trick.'

"I guess I'm able to keep a wife," said the young man, sullenly.

"Able to keep her, able to keep her! That aint it, it's the way you got her. Penelope Paine, after all the raising I've been giving you, do you realize what you have done? You've been guilty of eloping—eloping, do you hear?"

"That's all right, father-in-law," said Holburn. "Penelope's past 30 now and she'll soon come to know her own mind; when she comes to know it I hope she won't change; if she doesn't she'll never regret this elopement," and he kissed her.

1870. First Tea. 1895. Jubilee Tea.

THE MAMMOTH JUBILEE TEA

TO BE HELD AT

MORELL STATION,

About three minutes' walk from the charming Morell River, with its curious Floating Bridge,

On Wednesday, 26th June,

will be the crowning Social Event of the Season.

Proceeds in Aid of St. Joseph's Church, Morell.

Morell has long been the favorite sporting ground for seekers of health and rest, and the lovers of the rod and gun. The scenic attractions of the place are so well and widely known that it seems unnecessary to comment upon them here. Suffice it to say that in the last week of June—the most delightful week of the whole year—the natural beauties of the place will have attained their culminating point. These are considerations that should commend the Mammoth Jubilee Tea to all who desire a day of real pleasure and recreation after the hard work of spring. The preparations for the Tea are on an elaborate scale. The Committee in charge are putting forth all their efforts to make the Mammoth Jubilee Tea eclipse anything of the kind heretofore held in the Province. Already the impression is abroad—and it is a true one—that whoever wishes to attend the first, the largest and the best Tea of the season must not miss the "Mammoth." Thousands of people are expected from all over the country, but ample preparations will be made for all. There will be several Tea Tables groaning under the weight of the rarest delicacies of the season—smoking dinner tables, to which sea and stream, forest and farm will each contribute its choicest spoils, well-stocked Refreshment Saloons, Ice Cream and Strawberry Stalls, Bazaar Counters, commodious Dancing Booths, Revolving Swings and other attractions too numerous to mention. A well organized Vigilance Committee will be on the grounds to preserve good order. In a word, everything will be provided to make the day what it should be—one of pleasure and recreation. An excellent Brass Band will come by special train from Charlottetown. In addition to the Band there will be a Piper to enliven the sons of the heather.

Should the day prove unfavorable, the Tea Party will be continued on the following day

Trains will be run on standard time, as follows:—

A New Remedy in General Use in Manitoba and the Northwest.

The recovery from Bright's disease of Mr. Arthur Coley, of Somerset, through their use, an account of which appeared in the papers, gave a considerable impetus to the sale, and the remedy has become indispensible in many Manitoda households, its fame having penetrated into the remotest parts of the province and North West Territories.

15 Years of Itching.

W. Golding, commercial traveller, 130 Esther St., Toronto, says: "For 15 years I have suffered untold miseries from Itching Piles, sometimes called pin worms. Many and many weeks have I had to lay off the road from this trouble. I tried eight other pile ointments and so-called remedies with no permanent relief to the intense itching and stinging, which irritated by scratching, would bleed and ulcerate. One half a box of Chase's Ointment cured me completely."

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ar

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

"Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds"

Women are not all Beautiful but all women are attractive who are beautifully dressed.

Beauty unadorned may do in poetry, but the nicely fitting gown is the desire of every true woman. Priestley's dress fabrics have done much to realize a woman's ideals by offering, in their texture, appearance, fit and wear, a character and distinction, which no other dress goods, however excellent, have quite attained to. And now Priestley's have something new. The "Eudora" is all the rage. It is even better than the Henriettas so much admired. The "Eudora" has something which the Henrietta lacks—to wit: greater width, greater weight, and a superior dust shedding quality. And then it has an exquisite surface which gives it an almost regal presence. Wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and the name, Priestly, stamped on every five yards.
