But her ways are not always old ways. In fact she has discarded many unsatisfactory old ways. For instance, to-day she is using

HAD A HARD TIME.

Stowaway Went for 16 Days on One Day's Rations.

A remarkable adventure of hardship coupled with human endurance is related by Capt. Evans, of the British steamship William Anning, which arrived at Sparrow's Point yesterday with iron ore from St. Jago, Cuba. The case occurred upon the trip between Baltimore and Bordeaux, France. The Anning sailed from here May 13th with a full cargo of wheat.

On the 16th day out the chief officer reported to Capt. Evans that there were strange sounds in No. 3 hatch, which could be heard at intervals. The sounds continued until all on board were more or less impressed with the necessity of investigating what were thought by some to be spirit rappings, as all conceded that no human being could be in the small space between the bagged wheat and the iron deck above.

At last Capt. Evans decided to investigate. The battens and tarpaulins were removed and one of the hatches was taken off. Suddenly an emaciated man, who looked like a maniac, struggled on deck. He looked about and then made a rush for the ship's side, panting like a person who is driven wild by thirst. Seeing that the cool water of the sea had allured the man, Capt. Evans ordered his crew to seize him. Then water was given the man in small quantities, notwithstanding his piteous appeals for more. Brandy and water were also administered him with good effect.

As soon as possible Capt. Evans drew out the man's story, and recorded his name, home and age, in case he should die before reaching land. He said he belonged to Denmark and had stowed away on the Anning in Baltimore. When he hid in the hold he had one loaf of bread and a small can of water, which he thought would be sufficient until the vessel reached sea, when he intended to come from his hiding place. To his astonishment, when the hatch was fastened he saw his last chance for liberty cut off, and he made the voyage in the dark under the most terrible suspense and agony.

Much that he told Capt. Evans of his experience was awful to hear. He had probably fasted the whole time, except the first day of his imprisonment. He tried to eat wheat from the cargo, but his mouth produced no saliva and he could not masticate the grain. Capt. Evans cared for the man. When Bordeaux was reached he went ashore with the determination to walk to his home in Denmark. Capt Evens thinks if he could spend 17 days in the ship's hold he would be equal to the task before him.—Baltimore American.

Man and Woman.

Man is a creature of cast-iron methods; woman adapts herself to circumstances, says a correspondent of The New York World. A man refuses to drive a nail unless he has a hammer. A woman does not hesitate to use a poker or the heel of her shoe or the back of a brush. Man thinks it absolutely necessary to have a cork-screw to draw a cork. Woman will gouge it out with her scissors, or a knife or button hook. If it won't come out it will go down, and, after all, the contents of the bottle are what is wanted. A man regards a razor as consecrated to one calling. A woman has a higher opinion of its versatility, and uses it to sharpen pencils. This office surreptitiously performed leads her husband to say malignant things about razors and their makers. When a man writes he demands pomp and circumstance, and as wide an orbit as one of the planets. Pen, ink, and paper must be "just so," and he shuts up the whole family in a tower of silence, and nobody is allowed to think hard. When a woman writes she gathers up nondescript paper, stray copy-book leaves, backs of old envelopes, sharpens her pencil with the scissors, and, placing her material on an old atlas, tucks one foot under her, rocks comfortably back and forth, bites her pencil, periodically, and produces literature. She is oblivious to Tommy, distractedly adding and subtracting in a higher key, to Mollie beating French verbs into her brain by a succession of audible thumps and much vibrant buzzing; to Sallie running scales; to the cook, who demands supplies every few moments. She makes her lovers woo and quarrel and marry and the villains kill each other in the most circumscribed space.

How to Brandy Peaches.

One of the best peaches for brandying is the White Heath, though any white clingstone of fine flavor, perfectly ripe but of firm flesh, will be suitable for the purpose. For brandying peaches it is desirable to use the fruit whole, and remove the skin entire without leaving the marks of the knife. To do this put about a dozen peaches at a time in a wire basket and immerse them in boiling water. In about two minutes remove them and rub off the peel with a flannel cloth or a clean kitchen towel. Drop the fruit at once into the syrup as they are peeled. The syrup should be prepared in the proportion of six pounds of sugar and three pints of water to every nine pounds of fruit. Let the sugar melt in the water before you peel the fruit. When the sugar has thoroughly melted, begin dropping in the fruit as you peel it. When all the peaches are in the syrup, draw the kettle forward and begin cooking them. Let them cook just 10 minutes in the syrup. It requires a large, shallow kettle to prevent the peaches being crowded in the cooking. When they are done take them up and put them into glass jars. The pint size is more convenient for the ordinary family use. As the jars are filled pour in boiling syrup enough to reach half way up the height of the jar, and complete by filling with white brandy, which can always be procured at any first-class grocery store dealing in such supplies. The brandy and syrup will become sufficiently commingled by moving the jar gently about. A yellow peach is seldom or never used for this purpose. Screw the jars of brandy peaches up and set them away in the preserve closet. They will keep indefinitely.

The Chinese Razor.

The Chinese shave nearly every day. A queer little razor it is that they use, too. It is in no respect like our razor, except in the matter of the keenness of its edge. It is a wee bit of a blade, nicely curved into a semicircle. With this tool the Chinese barber scrapes the almost hirsuteless face of his customer and then shaves him around the ears and down the neck to the first bone of his spinal column. The rounded point of the razor is also inserted into the celestial ear, and every ambitious hair that dares to show itself in the auricular lobe is clipped before it proceeds very far.

THE POISONINGS BY MUSHROOMS.

Danger Involved in Eating Fungi—Edible Species.

The cases of poisoning by mistaking injurious fungi for edible mushrooms multiply. They have been mostly among Italians. In France, and in parts of Italy as well, people gather mushrooms in the forests as a staple article of diet, and seem to gather all sorts of fungi haphazardly. Before cooking them, however, these French invariably wash and soak them in salt and water, which acts as a powerful solvent of albuminoids and other organic compounds. There are other wholesome and nutritious food which may be poisonous in their natural condition, but rendered innocuous by treatment. Of these tapioca is another example.

Other continental cooks treat their dried fungi with boiling vinegar before cooking them, and are thus enabled to use species that would be otherwise uneatable. By these treatments right mushrooms lose their aroma and a good deal of their soluble nutritive properties. Drying may lessen the virulence of harmful species, but it is at the risk of favoring decomposition. It has been shown that poisonous species exist which are capable of retaining their noxious property several months after drying. Even the right mushroom has been observed to be capable of giving rise to symptoms inadequately described by the term: "An attack of indigestion."

Various rules have been laid down for distinguishing and identifying the edible fungi. Thus it is said that the skin can be separated from the table or pilus. So it can, but the skin can equally be separated in one of the more poisonous varieties. The stem ought to be cylindrical and solid; it is undoubtedly well to avoid mushrooms that, from any cause, have hollow stems. There are instances in which the right edible mushroom has produced symptoms of poisoning—diarrhœa, vomiting and a certain amount of collapse. So may tomatoes and other vegetables in a state of incipient decay.

The color of the gills is to be noted. These in the common mushroom are pink in young specimens, black in old ones, while between the two are found all shades of chocolate brown. But edible mushrooms are not all of one variety; there is one called the horse mushroom, which, however, we are told, might better be avoided when very large. And there are many species of edible fungi besides the mushroom. These are a neglected source of food. Some of them are quite as palatable as the mushroom and more common and more abundant. As long, however, as food stuff continues to be as cheap as it is in America the fungi are not likely to receive critical attention. By the time food becomes dear they, too, are likely to become relatively scarce. The attempts that have been made from time to time to popularize accurate knowledge of the edible fungi have not been successful.—N. Y. Sun.

Errors of Speech.

In English a great number of errors have been so well reproved that they are growing rarer. "And which," and the false collocation of "only," which a few years ago were everywhere, are sometimes hardly to be met with in the whole of a leading article. On the other hand, new outrages are gradually getting common. "Infer," for "imply," which would some little time ago, have been smiled at as a mere vulgarism, is incredibly frequent in conversation and by no means unknown in print. But far more hideous is "human" for human being. And this has appeared of late in London newspapers that ought to know better. Our own complaints as to this offence have been met by a plea that the word so used is English poetry as well as colonial prose, and may be found in the poems of Mrs. Browning. Obviously, however, she uses "the human" not in place of "the man," but precisely as "the beautiful," "the true," were so constantly used by the ante-penultimate Lord Lytton.

New follies are the more to be resisted as the language of the press is shedding old ones and is gaining much in simplicity. The jaded phrase, being spent, is at last allowed to drop out and die. And with it will by degrees pass away the habit of exaggeration, boisterous, cold, disappointing, from which a reader turns with chilly disapproval. The weak exaggerate often and the strong exaggerate now and then. Exaggeration is quite a different thing from extravagrance, violence delirium. These may lawfully claim their moment in art. But they can never cover or diguise the intrusion of exaggeration instantly unmistakable, and forever unpardonable.

Then there is the opposite of exaggeration, which is less mischievous but sillier. It is not common in literature, but it is a most familiar note in a certain kind of respectable journalism. Here is an excellent instance in Thursday's Times (Duke Ernest's biographer is describing that prince's action and influence as contributory to the work of German unity): "The remark of the Emperor William to him at Versailles, 'This I owe partly to you,' was in a certain measure justified."

The jaded phrase, the silly phrase, and the phrase of exaggeration are to be avoided simply by simplicity. To attend, to wait upon what you really think; not to interrupt yourself with too loud a word; not to translate your uncertainty by too much talk.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Peaceable Race.

The Javanese manner of settling quarrels is original. When one man has offended another the injured party gives notice that he is angry by drawing in the sand before the door of the offender a circle with a straight line across it, indicating that his affection, which would have been eternal, has been cut in two. Friends of both parties then shut them up. They parley awhile, then pretend to be born again, prattle as little children, and finally as men become reconciled and embrace. Should one be refractory and refuse to be conciliated he is ostracized by the community so effectually that he is soon brought to terms. It is just possible that our enlightened citizens might consider this method better than knock-down arguments, and certainly much cheaper than going to law.—Harper's Bazar.

Horseflesh in the Celestial Empire.

Beef, says a writer on Chinese customs, is much supplanted in the celestial empire by horse flesh. The poor eat horses that have done their work and died, but for the rich a special breed of horses is preserved, whose function is to be fattened and nothing else. These horses are tiny of stature and possess but little strength. Their inherited capacity for waxing fat on the cheapest straw and garbage is a tribute to natural selection and the genius of Chinese breeders.
