Ceremony Unites Couple At
St. John's Anglican Church

Baskets of white snowball and red peonies adorned the chancel of St. John's Anglican Church, Milton, on June 30th, 1950, at 7 p.m., when Doris Anne, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Brenton Coles, Milton, became the bride of Albert Douglas, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Parkman, East royalty.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. A.E. Pierce, Horace Coles, cousin of the bride, played the wedding music and accompanied the junior girls choir singing "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden," and "O God of Bethel," during the ceremony. Miss Gail Carter, soloist, sang "O Perfect Love," during the signing of the register.

The guests were ushered by Allison Coles, brother of the bride, and David McGuey, brother-in-law of the groom to pews marked with white satin bows. Donald Mutch, cousin of the groom, was best man.

Given in marriage by her father, Doris was radiant in her bridal gown of pearly white peau de sole. It featured a fitted bodice, empire waistline, short sleeves and a scalloped neckline which was bordered with applied lace. The full hooped skirt was deeply pleated in the back and flowed into a short train. A circular chapel veil of bridal illusion caught by a coronet of tulle completed her bridal attire. She wore elbow length mitts and carried a white Bible adorned with red roses and streamers of red roses and white snapdragons.

Mrs. Harold Smith, matron of honor for her sister, wore a dress of blue flecked nylon over deeper blue taffeta. The bridesmaids, Beryl Coles, sister of the bride, and Mrs. Lloyd Seaman, twin sister of the groom, wore pink flecked nylon over deeper pink taffeta. The gowns were street length and identical in style with the brides. Little June Wheatley, niece of the bride, was the very winsome flower girl in her cute short flock of blue flecked nylon over deeper blue taffeta. All attendants wore hats to match their gowns and short white gloves. They carried baskets of mixed summer flowers.

Mrs. Coles, mother of the bride, choose for her daughter's wedding a sheath dress of powder blue lace with matching jacket. Her accessories were white and black and she wore a corsage of pale pink carnations. The groom's mother was dressed in a beige flowered dress with beige accessories. Her corsage was of white carnations.

A buffet luncheon was served at the home of the bride following the wedding. Assisting in serving were Miss Chrissie MacLeod, R.T., Mrs. Nelson Henry, Mrs. Neil Sharp, R.N., Mrs. David Stewart R.T., Miss Ruth MacLeod and Miss Karen MacRae.

The table was centered with a three tiered wedding cake topped with and surrounded by pink roses and white baby mums and maiden hair fern. The cake was cut in traditional manner and passed by the bride and groom to the guests.

Mrs. Keith Wheatly, sister of the bride, and Mrs. David McGuey, sister of the groom, were in charge of the guest book.

A telegram was received from Mr. and Mrs. John MacRae, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

Mr. and Mrs. Parkman left by car to spend their honeymoon at different points of interest in the Eastern States and Quebec. The bride's going away dress was a blue flowered nylon with matching duster. Her accessories were white and she wore a corsage of white carnations.

Prior to her marriage the bride a graduate of the P.E.I. Hospital School of Radiology, was an x-ray technician on the staff of the Prince County Hospital, Summerside. The groom is on the staff of Canadian Tire corporation, Charlottetown.

ELLEN'S DIARY

A Pleasant Drive To Store For Extra Food Supplies.

A pair of green eyes against the roadside bracken shone in the light of the little truck which carried us to the store this evening. Gran'daddy belt he seemed some "baccas", Mack "something cold to get this little old engine hitting on all its cylinders again" after his day (holiday) at the harvest, and we had requirements of cupboard in mind. We went over them silently to make sure we cooks at Alderlea should find we had not been a foolish - virgins - of - women caught unprepared for them, when the harvest currently dinging and sipping at Rob's should return hungry again to our tables. Essentials we must remember—the yeasts and tea, the sugars and shortening, the baking powder, so that by making a few magic passes above our mixing-bowls and in our fires we may present them with wholesome and appetizing fare. A momentary lapse of memory in our shopping can cause us much inconvenience at this place.

A pleasant September night it is—one of soft hazes and harvest lands dreaming in the light of the young moon; of starlight and balminess, and twinkling lights in farm-windows their folks come now to moments of leisure and rest. Eyes by the roadside shone, and a low dark shape moved along furtively in the shadows. "It's a skunk perhaps? Or maybe a coon ambling off to that harvest field" we offered. "No" Mack said "It's a black cat! It's just as well—he commented, "he's going with us and not crossing the road. Bad luck, you know" he nodded. "We mustn't take things like that too seriously" we chuckled. "After all they're mostly only old sayings come down to us most likely from days when witchcraft was practised and folks knew no better."

"But it's strange," James said "how sometimes they seem to prove they have meaning. Only coincidence, of course. All the same I can't pass a horseshoe without picking it up for good luck. And I'm not too fond of walking under a ladder—I'd rather go around it. And I never like to have to return home for something I've forgotten once I've started away from the place."

"And I don't like to look over the wrong shoulder at it the first time the new moon shows" Mack commented soberly. There's bound to be something not too good come of it."

"What makes you think so?" his grandfather queried. "Well I remember one evening last year I did—just happened to, you know and the next day in school was a regular nightmare. Nothing went right! I was glad when at last it was over."

"You were likely only tired. Up too late the night before" we said. "We know they're only old sayings," James offered "but we like to half-believe them, even though we know better."

"They leave us with a bit of magic in our living, now that with scientists' discoveries not too many mysteries remain" we said. "We don't believe them" Mack remarked. "But" his voice held a smile "I'm just as glad that black cat didn't cross our path!"

A perfect harvest-day this one which allowed our harvesters many stocks for their hire. Until tomorrow — — — Diary, Good-night.

fashion takes to shape with new elegance

...by day

Dressmaker softness stems from fluid lines gliding over the figure and accenting the waistline. Tailleur fashions are identified by easy tailoring dramatizing the feminine figure.

A New feeling of shoulder line width is achieved by clever cut, by dropped shoulders, large collars and by sleeve shapings!

The Impressive Fall collections at Eaton's encompass every phase of this new fashion look!

...in the evening

fashion's new elegance becomes glamorous and romantic—the mood is set by opulent fabrics!

Shaped and glove-like sleeves are a major theme. Paradoxically, while these sleeves give a more covered-up look, neckline plunge, in the front, the back or both... fascinating! Theatre and restaurant costumes are high drama. Usually the dress is a shapely shaft covered by a jacket in the Chanel manner.

It's a high note in sumptuousness for the evening... for a singularly beautiful collection see the new Fall socialites at EATON'S!

... a Dressmaker Softness and a shapely Tailleur theme develop this becoming new approach to elegance!
