

European Economy Stronger Than Before The Suez Crisis

By FORBES RUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

"It is clear now that they have stood the strain remarkably well." The quote is from the International Monetary Fund and it concerns the manner in which European countries have come through the oil-shipment difficulties caused by the Suez closure. It illustrates, too, the amazing toughness and resiliency of the world's economy in an international political atmosphere of fevers and chills.

Time and again, in the post-war years, the world economy has been threatened with crises which many thought might bring it toppling. Instead of toppling it seems to get stronger and stronger.

There are reasons for this. One of these is that people at all levels—individuals, business, industry, government, international bodies—have learned to cooperate in, and in crises, to cooperate in a really big way.

Mark Twain Is Off Broadway

By MARK BARREN
NEW YORK (AP)—A musical revue with dash and imagination, "Livin' the Life," is one of the most refreshing shows that has hounded into this area—the Phoenix Theatre off Broadway—for some time.

The show opened Saturday night. Based on Mark Twain's Mississippi River stories, the excellent and tender libretto by Dal Wasserman and Bruce Giler is woven around the story of Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, Aunt Polly and Becky Thatcher. Also Indian Joe Muff Potter and Doc Robinson.

Being a musical, "Livin' the Life" doesn't attempt to be a dramaticization of the adventurous escapades of Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn; rather, these characters are made reluctant figures in a dance-musical.

The humorous, impossible story supposedly happened around Hannibal, Mo., about 1850.

This musical with lyrics by Bruce Geller and music by Jack Urborn has a skillful string of songs—Alice Ghostley singing "Don't Tell Me and Late Love" and "Tommy Everett and Patsy Brader" as Tom and Becky, singing "Aunt Polly" as Aunt Polly.

"Livin' the Life" is an intelligent, lovely musical, produced and performed with taste and a vivid quality.
