Forest Management In N.S. Expected To Boost Output

HALIFAX (CP)—Government forestry officials in Nova Scotia are counting on a current reform of forest management practices to triple the province's woodlot production.

The success of the program could be a vital factor in the economy of the province, where four-fifths of the land surface is available for forest production.

Mr. Haliburton says the act has not yet been extended to meet some of the province's most pressing forestry problems, including thinning and dealing with the sylvan junk that now occupies so much of the area where trees of a good quality and species should be growing.

But officials believe the act will help provide an increasing supply of forest products. They hope it will also serve to conserve water and reduce flooding problems and improve the province's wildlife habitat and recreational areas.

There are indications the program is only the beginning of a continuous effort to strengthen the province's forestry potential.

"We have taken a few positive steps," Mr. Haliburton says. "We now should be able to develop further improvements in our forestry habits and practices."

If your cooking's gone to pot

Because your pots have, replace them with ones of nickel stainless steel. It will not buckle or warp from excessive heat; or spoil even the most delicate food flavour. Nickel stainless steel is highly resistant to stains, tarnish and corrosion; and so easy to clean and keep clean. No wonder pots and pans, and many other household products, are made of nickel stainless steel. And in all of them, nickel's contribution is quality.
