LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

"YOU WRONG ME EVERY WAY; YOU WRONG ME, BRUTUS."

SIR,—After reading the letter of your correspondent "Brutus," the first thought that came to me was: Brutus, thou art like the fish which seeks to escape attack by dirtying the water in which it moves; or, like the man who, having committed a crime, puts his toes into the heels of his boots and walks off, thinking thereby to escape detection! But the blood-mark is on you, "Brutus."

"Our educational system," says "Brutus," "has hitherto embraced every course from the kindergarten to the university." Once upon a time two men agreed that each should make a statement as far as possible from truth; whereupon one said that he had driven a long spike through the moon. "Yes," said the other, "I remember it well, and I went around the moon and clinched it!" Was this individual "Brutus"? Whatever kindergarten work has been done, is solely the outcome of private venture; and any instruction in branches of study specially regarded as a university course in the Prince of Wales College, has been imparted, so far as I can ascertain, before the regular hours for opening that institution. The work is wholly gratuitous on the part of the professors. Our school system recognizes neither kindergarten nor university. "Brutus" proceeds:—"What benefit do we or the cause of education, directly or indirectly, derive from this higher education? I claim that there is no such benefit from it." Will "Brutus" admit that the more highly educated an individual is the greater is the mental discipline he has undergone, and as a consequence, the better qualified he is for imparting instruction? Taking this as granted, does not the country derive a direct benefit from those who, having studied the more advanced course in the Prince of Wales College, go into our schools as teachers? But "it is a rare thing," says "Brutus," "to find one of these students in the teaching profession." It is a rule of syntax, that two negatives in the same sentence are improper. But it is quite as "improper" not to have one negative when there should be one. The statement made by "Brutus" should read: "It is a rare thing to find one of these students not in the teaching profession." In fact the rule is these students are almost invariably found in the teaching profession; the exception is to find them not there. True, they remain only a few years; but this is chiefly owing to insufficient remuneration. While they are in the service of their country they render measure for measure for what they have received from it. Again, "let it be remembered," says "Brutus," "that no other province in Canada provided this higher education. To this I need say no more than that it is a confession of utter ignorance of the matter.

Again, "the parent is deluded into the idea that without attendance at college his boy can not be fitted to take 2nd or 3rd class license." "Brutus" has allowed his feelings, hostile to the college, to obtain the mastery over him. Indeed, one might conclude, from the unqualified rashness of his statements, that he has no proper conception of the moral power of truth, or the moral weakness of a—. He is well aware that the examination papers set for entrance to the college are the requirements exacted for a third-class license; that attendance at the college is compulsory solely with the view of the student's being trained for the work of a teacher. "This very regulation," says "Brutus," "should at once be repealed for the simple reason that no normal training worthy of the name is provided at the Prince of Wales College." The reason is "simple," but it is reason without sense. Granted that no normal training is given at the College, is that an argument against the training of student-teachers? He is regarded as the most successful farmer who raises the largest crops with the least expense to himself and the soil. This method of farming can be arrived at only after repeated experiments, or by adopting the improved methods of those more experienced. So the teacher, who does the most efficient work with the greatest ease to himself and comfort to his pupils, is justly considered the most successful teacher. But the young teacher must acquire a knowledge of the art of teaching, either by a long experience, amid frequent failures, or from the experience of others. By the latter he obtains this knowledge with much less cost to himself and with infinitaly less to his pupils. It is, therefore, wisdom to learn from the trials of others. One should know much of the thinking and doings of others. We are in a progressive age.

"The serf of his own past is not a man;
To change and change is life, to move and never rest."

Under proper training, student-teachers are taught how best to adapt their plans to mental peculiarities, to discover moral characteristics, and, in fact, to understand the whole individualism of his pupils. This is no mere schoolboy's work. If, then, our Normal School is not doing its legitimate work—and I am free to admit that it is not—what remedy ought we propose? Certainly not the closing of the institution, but demanding that it shall henceforth perform the special work for which it exists. Place it upon a proper basis; remodel, if you will, the whole machinery; what is inefficient or imperfect make perfect. Upon the Normal School's doing its legitimate work must largely depend the future status of our schools. The result is the reason why some things should be let alone and why others should be done; and results are the strongest kind of reasons. But the prototype of "Brutus" is the boy who took a horse to market, sold him for a cow, the cow for a mule, the mule for a goose, the goose for an egg, and then ate the egg.

STAMP COLLECTORS.

THERE ARE ALREADY OVER 5,000,000 OF THEM.

The Enormous Value of Some Collections—One of Them Worth $500,000—The Cost of Some Single Specimens—Stamp Collectors Not Fools.

Five millions of postage stamp collectors, among whom are their Royal Highnesses the Duke of York and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, have caused philately to advance in popular favor by leaps and bounds, says the London Telegraph. So great is the competition for rare issues that £340 has been paid for a single specimen. Postage stamp collecting is no longer a mere pastime or hobby, it is a science, as philatelists say, and, at all events, they make of it a very serious pursuit.

There are still people who hold to the belief that the passion for preserving postage stamps is nothing but a mania, excusable during boyhood, for it is supposed to be useful in teaching lads geography and the extent of the British Empire, but when men devote their time to collecting foreign, colonial or English issues they are frequently looked upon as harmless lunatics, to whom the old adage may be appropriately applied: "Fools and their money are soon parted." Philatelists, however, are possessed of considerable common sense, and much method underlies their madness. In truth, stamp collecting has developed an important feature, for, as a correspondent points out, it has become the recognized medium of investment on the part of thousands of professional and business men, who are content to forego immediate dividends upon their capital in order to realize compound interest at a high rate.

Members of the Stock Exchange—from a love of speculation—barristers, doctors, army officers very largely, and the clergy to some extent are to be found gravely and systematically collecting stamps today. Many of them possess collections numbering tens of thousands of specimens, and some of these are of great value, and are duly insured at Lloyd's. It is probable, however, that no British philatelist can vie with Von Ferrary, of Paris, whose treasures are said to be worth £100,000. Important collections have been made in Australia, and it is stated that during the late bank crisis more than one house of business saved its mercantile credit by raising money on rare postage stamps which were held by the partners.

How very extensive the interests of stamp collectors have become in London is demonstrated by the fact that there are nearly forty firms engaged as dealers in the City and West End. Last season two auctioneers in the metropolis turned over nearly £15,000, and a third firm is supposed to have dealt with stamps to the value of about £10,000 more at public sale. These figures are significant when it is recollected that stamp auction sales are comparatively of recent introduction, and that they are entirely supplementary to the methods of distribution and exchange which have been in operation since stamp collecting first became a fashionable hobby in 1861.

Best Dog to Keep.

I have often been asked to advise as to the best dog to keep, and in answer I have always said that everything depended upon where and how the prospective dog owner lived. To keep a large dog with a heavy coat in a town house always struck me as cruel. Large dogs need exercise, else they get too fat and then fall ill. In town a fox terrier and the sluggish pug are to be preferred, or any of the little toy dogs. In the country any kind of dog may be kept, the selection depending upon the taste of the owner. The pointer and setter are both most companionable, and if there is anything to shoot in the neighborhood they are most valuable. All of the spaniels, on account of their intelligence, are interesting, and the mastiff is an invaluable watch-dog for a farm or country place. But any purely bred, well trained dog, where there is room for exercise, will earn his keep in a thousand different ways, not least of which is that affectionate loyalty that remains always true, though the dog be subjected to neglect, discouragement and even active abuse.—John Gilmer Speed in St. Louis Republic.

Told of Ellen Terry.

Here is a story illustrating the ready tact of Ellen Terry, the actress. She had promised to introduce a man to Mr. Irving, but had forgotten his name. On the pretext, as the story goes, that she and Mr. Irving had had a little dispute about the way the man's name was spelled, making a bet about it she got him to write it on a slip of paper. Of course that saved her. If Miss Terry did this she was more fortunate than another clever woman about whom a similar story is told. She, too, when she had forgotten a name, said that she wished to settle a dispute about the spelling of the name by having it written out for her. The man then gravely scribbled his name. It was a name that is not spelled in more than a dozen different ways. It was Jones!

Bad for Secrets.

One of the most striking phenomena of the Adirondack region is the carrying power of the human voice in still weather upon the lakes, great and small. Persons ashore easily hear the ordinary conversation of others who are so far out upon the lake as to be undistinguishable, and as a great many Adirondack visitors habitually violate the law touching the slaughter of deer, all such offenders are extremely careful not even to whisper a word that might betray their guilt when rowing upon the lakes.

Popular Fallacies.

That to be great is to be misunderstood.

That ladies pay no attention to the ballet.

That a warm heart is better than all riches.

That a poet cannot appreciate a lobster salad.

That Vassar students never think of matrimony.

That rhubard is never eaten by the elect of men.

Average Age.

Kasper says that of clergymen, 42 per cent. reach 70 years; farmers, 40; merchants, 33; soldiers and clerks, 32; lawyers, 20; teachers, 28; physicians, 24.

Enough to Cause a Strike.

In the days of the Emperor Diocletian, a house painter's wages were sixty cents a day, while a schoolmaster received only sixty cents a month for each pupil.
