

Racy Literature.

A gentleman travelling through one of rural precincts of a certain county, a few days since, rode up to a farm house, and thus accosted a two-headed urchin who was seated on the top of a gate post; "Boy, where's your Pa?" The youngster replied: "Pap is just down there beyant the cowshed to dig a grave to bury our old dog Towser. The darned old fool killed himself a barkin' at candidates for sheriffs. Be you one?" Our friend rode on.

Most liquids run; but we have often seen ink stand.

Young men anxious to get rid of their wild oats, would do well to buy a sewing machine.

A child wanted to describe a snake to his aunt, and said it was "a thing all tail—clear up to the head!"

Why are the eyes like persons separated by distant climes? Because they correspond but never meet.

A fellow in an oblivious state, took up his lodgings on the sidewalk. He woke next morning and straightened himself up, looking on the ground on which he had made his couch, and said: "Well, if I had a pick-axe, I would make up my bed!"

Uncle Sam, recently calling up to him, said: "Young man, let me give you a little friendly advice; never marry a rich wife; behold in me one who married rich. My wife had thirty-seven and a half cents, while I had but a quarter, and she has been twitting me of the old shilling ever since."

A gentleman informed by a bill on a house that there were 'Apartment to let,' knocked at the door, and was smiling the premises by a pretty female.

"Pray, my dear," said he, smiling, "are you to be let with these rooms?" "No," she replied with vivacity, "but I am to be let alone."

A small boy stepped into a bookstore and inquired the price of a spelling book. On being told that they were twelve cents apiece, and being possessed of but nine cents, he was completely nonplussed. At length an idea seemed to have struck him. Says he:

"Mister, can't you find one that is torn that you will let me have for nine cents?"

The clerk looked in vain. The boy was dispirited. At length another idea seemed to strike him.

"Please, Mister, can't you tear one?"

In the course of a charge a Judge said: "Put a tailor, a weaver and miller in a bag; shake them, and the first who comes out is a rogue."

"Well, your honor," answered the miller, "put an attorney, a counsellor and a judge into a bag; shake 'um and shake 'um."

"And what then, rascal?" cried the judge, angrily.

"Why, your honour," continued the miller, coolly—not daring to speak the truth—"he that won't come out, may it please your honor, may stay in."

A court buffoon having offended his sovereign, the monarch ordered him to be brought before him, and with a stern countenance reproached him.

"Wretch! you shall receive the punishment you merit; prepare yourself for death."

The culprit, in a great terror, fell upon his knees, and cried for mercy.

"I will extend no other mercy to you, except permitting you to decide what kind of death you will die. Decide immediately, for I will be obeyed."

"I adore your clemency," said the crafty jester, "I choose to die of old age!"

After a long march, during the late war, a captain ordered, as a sanitary precaution, that the men should change their shirts. The orderly sergeant suggested that half of the men had only one.

The captain hesitated for a moment, then said: "Military orders be obeyed; let the men change with the happiest of the vowels!"

As: Because i is in the midst of hell, and all the others are ordinary.

Agriculture.

DISPOSE OF SURPLUS STOCK.

An error many cattle breeders are liable to be led into, this year, on account of the large crop of hay, is that of holding on to their stock because they have the keeping for carrying it through the winter. The policy undoubtedly would be a poor one, for the chances are that the animals next spring will be worth no more than now. Beef is bringing a high price, and is liable any time to fall, so the true policy is to sell all the surplus animals as soon as they become fat enough for the market. The steers and heifers that are already grass fat will yield their owners as much profit now, and we think more, than at any future time. The difference in the cost of stall fed beef, and that which has been fattened upon grass, is more than enough to over-balance the increased price of the former.

This is a subject that demands the consideration of farmers where the pastures are getting dry and the feed short, for the improvement for the balance of the season will be small. We make these suggestions for the consideration of those who have surplus stock. The point is, that simply because hay is plenty and cheap, there will be risk in holding on to animals that are marketable, and will now bring a high price. A few tons of hay left over next spring will be handy to have in the barn against time of need. Another year the crop may be light which would make hay high and also make stock cheap. It will be found a safe rule to adopt in regard to the amount of stock to be wintered, to keep above the average number of head your farm will support, take one year with another, and under no circumstances keep more than can be kept well.
