Opening lead—six of clubs.
The annals of bridge record many famous hands. Here is one of the strangest. It was played in a team of four match at Helsinki between Austria and Germany in 1954. The bidding is not reported because it was indescribably bad.
At the first table Karl Schneider of Austria, one of the great card players of all time, became declarer at six hearts. West led a club.
Schneider saw at a glance there was no legitimate chance to make the contract. There were two spade losers. He decided to play boldly in an effort to steal the hand. After ruffing a club in dummy, he led a low spade to the jack. West took the ace and played another club.
This was trumped in dummy and the king of hearts was overtaken. After cashing the queen of hearts and ace of clubs, Schneider led out all his trumps, in the course of which West improperly discarded a diamond.

Schneider's last three cards, after leading the final trump, were 10-5 of spades and a diamond. Dummy held A-K-6 of diamonds. But East had to choose a discard on the last trump from his holding of Q-J-9 of diamonds and king of spades. He was squeezed. Whatever he discarded, South had the last three tricks. So Austria scored 1,430 points.
At the second table the German North became declarer at six spades. He had the A-K of trump to contend with but he also succeeded in making the slam.
East opened a club, taken in dummy. The jack of spades was led and everybody played low. East thought declarer had A-Q and decided he might fool declarer by not grabbing the king.
North, alert to the situation, led a diamond to his ace and returned a low spade towards dummy's 10-5.
East clung to his original view that declarer had A-Q. He put up his king of spades. It held the trick for a fraction of a second until West took it with the ace.
So again the slam was made this time in spades.

BEDTIME STORIES

Only A Moment

A single moment may arrange. For one or more a life-time change.
Old Mother Nature of time. It is so small that it doesn't seem as if it could be of any great importance. Yet a single moment can change a single life and more. Over in the Green Forest, at the edge of it, Redeye the Vireo and Mrs. Redeye had been building a nest. It was like a small woven basket in the fork of two twigs near the end of a branch of maple tree. Mrs.

Redeye is a good home-maker. She is fussy about her home. All good home makers are fussy. Mrs. Redeye can do what only a few of her feathered neighbors can do. She can weave. Her dainty nest is woven of grasses and other fine soft material, much as is the nest of Goldie the Oriole.
He couldn't resist the temptation. He went.
Mrs. Redeye had done something that she is not in the habit of doing. She had come up late and she had laid her eggs in that little nest before it was finished. However, it was near enough done so that she could finish it while she was sitting on these precious eggs of hers. This she did. Redeye brought the materials and she wove them into place the way those two little feathered folk worked together was lovely to see. While he worked Redeye did a lot of singing, for he was very, very happy. He loved to sing to Mrs. Redeye and she loved to have him sing to her.
By the time the nest was finished there were four pretty little eggs in it. Now while those eggs were not babies to worry about, Mr. and Mrs. Redeye did worry about them almost as if they were babies.
"We mustn't leave this nest unguarded at all because I have seen Sally Sly in the neighborhood," said Redeye.
Sally Sly the Cowbird has a name a very bad name. She never takes care of her own children. She tricks her feathered neighbors into taking care of her children. Some folks think it is because she is too lazy to do the work herself, but it seems more likely that she does it because she is so selfish that she wants to spend all her time gadding about and having what is called "a good time."
There are other folks very like Sally Sly in this matter.
So the Redeyes were careful not to leave those precious eggs unguarded. While Mrs. Redeye was looking for something to eat Redeye took her place. In this way they took turns. They didn't mean that Sally Sly should ever have a chance to slip into that nest and leave an egg there.
On the morning after the fourth egg was laid a fuss broke out over in the Old Orchard. There was a lot of excitement over there.
At the time Mrs. Redeye was off looking for her breakfast and Redeye was on the nest. He wondered what the excitement was. It sounded as if there was a fight. "It won't take me but a moment to slip over there and find out," thought he. He couldn't resist the temptation. He went. He was sure he was gone only a moment. But in that moment something happened.

He couldn't resist the temptation. He went.

Law On Insanity Left Unchanged

OTTAWA (CP)—A five-member royal commission has recommended no basic change in the law of insanity as a defence in criminal cases. It was announced Friday.
It recommended in its 70-page report dated Oct. 25 but released only Friday that the present law regarding the burden of proof and the procedure in insanity pleas be continued.
That is, an accused who pleads not guilty because of insanity must prove insanity at his trial and the jury alone must rule on the evidence introduced.
The commission was headed by Chief Justice J. C. McRuer of the Ontario high court and was set up in 1954 to study insanity as a legal defence.
The other members were: Dr. Gustave Desrochers, Quebec City psychiatrist; county court judge Helen Kinnear of Hamilton, Ont.; Dr. Robert O. Jones, psychiatry professor, Dalhousie University, Halifax; and Joseph Harris, Winnipeg, president of Great-West Life Assurance Company.
The report said the commission heard representations that the Crown should be required to prove, in insanity pleas, that the accused was not insane at the time of the crime. However, it commented:

"We do not feel that the evidence we have heard warrants a recommendation of any change in the law in this respect. The onus on the accused to establish the defence by a mere preponderance of probability (of insanity) is not a heavy onus."
It said there were representations that the question of criminal responsibility should be decided separately from the trial by a board of three psychiatrists—one representing the Crown, one the defence and a third chosen by agreement of the first two or appointed by the court.
There were variations of this suggestion, the report said, but the royal commission said:
"The great weight of responsible opinion is against taking from the tribunal of fact as now constituted the authority to decide whether or not an accused person should be found criminally responsible for his acts."
UNCONSTITUTIONAL
It also suggested that it might be unconstitutional for Parliament to let a separate board of experts—instead of his peers—decide the criminal responsibility of the accused.
However, the commission recommended that the statutory provision should be made for a board of review consisting of three psychiatrists to report to and advise the cabinet in its usual review of all death sentences.
It also recommended that a magistrate should have the power to decide at a preliminary hearing whether the accused is mentally fit to stand trial, but the Crown should still have the power to prefer a charge in a higher court despite the magistrate's finding.
The royal commission suggested that the Supreme Court of Canada should be asked to make a clear and authoritative statement as to the proper instruction a judge must give to a jury in connection with pleas of insanity.
However, it suggested its own. It would instruct a jury to "on a mere preponderance of probability based on the evidence as a whole" the accused was so diseased in his mind that he could not foresee the consequence of his act or was incapable of knowing his act was wrong.

Hussein Blames "New Kind Of Imperialism" For Riots

AMMAN, Jordan (Reuters)—King Hussein of Jordan has blamed "a new kind of imperialism" for the recent riots and plots which threatened to topple him from his throne.
In a message of farewell Friday to visiting King Saud of Saudi Arabia, who has been here for a week, the young king said:
"The Jordanian people appreciate your noble good wishes, which supported us when darkness and destructive forces turned on us and subversive hands were laid on us."
He said these forces—"moving dummies" which receive instructions from their masters aiming to spread evil and corruption—"wanted to destroy the religious basis of Jordan's nationhood and harm her sovereignty and independence."
"These hands and voices receive their orders and guidance from a new imperialism which aims to enslave the Arabs and undermine their struggle against slavery," Hussein said.
EGYPT PLOT ALLEGED
The talks between the two monarchs occurred as Jordan accused Egypt of plotting sabotage and planning assassination of leaders and members of the royal family.

In a communique issued Thursday night, the two monarchs said the defence of the Arab world be the responsibility of the Arab countries themselves.
Saud said before departing that he will make every effort to support the cause of unity between Jordan and Saudi Arabia.
The kings also insisted the Gulf of Aqaba is Arab territorial waters and under the complete jurisdiction of Arab states. Turning down Israel's claim, they said they do not recognize the gulf as an international waterway.
They also said they will defend Arab sovereignty over the gulf Co-operation with their sister ISRAELI COMMENT
In Tel Aviv, an Israeli foreign ministry source described the Saudi-Jordanian claim as an attempt to "introduce the fiction of Israel's non-existence into international law."
The Israeli source added: "It is an undeniable fact that Israel is a littoral state of the gulf and Elath is the most important port on the gulf and the only one besides the Jordanian port of Aqaba."
