HIGHFIELD W.A. MEETING... The members of Highfield United Church Women's Association held their February regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Stillman Frizzell.

The devotional period, conducted by Mrs. Creed, began with the singing of the hymn "I Waited for the Lord." Acts 12 was read by the several members present, following which the leader, continuing a series of study on "Women of the Bible," gave a short address on the life and faith of Sarah. This was followed by prayer and the singing of the hymn "Come, Lead Us to the Lord."

Ten members answered roll call with a verse of Scripture including the word "Spirit". The minutes of previous meeting were read and declared approved. Lenten Meditations

From The Times, London

THE GOSPEL OF SPRING

When our Lord taught in Palestine, the sources from which he drew to reinforce his words were the Old Testament and the world of Nature. As he used them the two might have been described as the Book of Warnings and the Book of Encouragement. It is true that many pages of the Old Testament abound in comfort, yet almost always the purpose for which our Lord quoted its writings was to warn his hearers of the consequences which must follow their wilful rejection of God's claims.

But in the Book of Nature, our Lord urged every disciple should find perpetual encouragement. Was he anxious for his worldly needs? Let him note how the sparrows were fed, not one forgotten before God. Did he doubt if God could concern himself with things or cares of almost infinite smallness? Let him consider the glowing magnificence of the wayside flowers. Did he long to discern the future? Let him be sure that it revealed its presage to the understanding, as the trained eye discerned the morning's calm or storm from the crimson of sunrise or sunset. Most significant of all to our Lord seemed the law of growth, not only as developed in amplitude of harvest field or clustered vine, but in the birth of Spring, in the hidden life of the seed, in the power of the slender green spears to pierce or uplift the rigid soil. Each in its tiny being brought reassurance of divine love and power, of life renewed and triumphant.

Our Lord would have every man respond to this message, and when he spoke to his listeners of Nature he was not merely using a poet's imagery. That the things made proclaimed their maker was not for him a metaphor or a hint of a possibility; it was the literal assertion of a most actual fact. As explicitly as the Old Testament Scriptures did the world of Nature speak of God, and its encouragement was for all who would receive it.

CLOSING OF HANDICRAFT CLASSES

On Wednesday evening March 12 the closing of the handicraft classes was held at the lovely home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward McPhail. The work accomplished by the members during the past two months was exhibited, and made a fine showing, especially the weaving which was a very popular activity. Considerable interest was revived in this craft, and excitement ran high when the web was enroled with all its bright patterns, and each member claimed her own. An address was read by Mrs. Joseph Hayley and a gift presented by Mrs. Urban McQuaid to Mr. and Mrs. McPhail in appreciation of their kindness in opening their home three nights a week to the group. Both Mr. and Mrs. McPhail responded very graciously. Their very capable teacher, Miss Arsenault, was also remembered with a gift and addressed by Mrs. Neil Matheson. She replied in her own charming manner. After a short singing, a bountiful lunch was served, which brought the pleasant evening to a close.

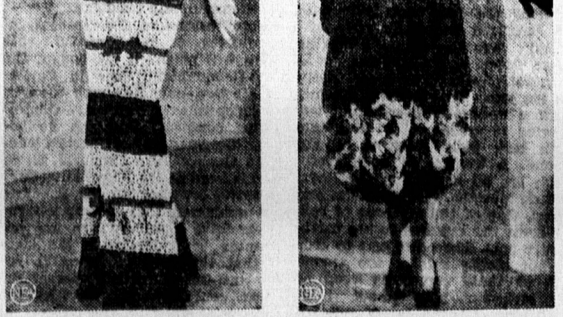

One Paris Designer Keeps Hemline High

(By Barbara Stephenson) PARIS, March 19.—(Reuters)—The rule among Paris designers has been to lower the hemline, but Jean Patou is an exception.

Patou's clothes remain just below the knee as last year's models without exception. As usual, there is a wealth of detail in the Patou creations. He shows an exceptionally fine selection of classic tailors which he complements with lingerie blouses, tucked, pleated and embroidered in true exquisite Parisian manner. Pleats abound for afternoon and evening wear—even a negligee fashioned from ashes-of-roses pleated chiffon.

Fur is a luxurious high note. Silver fox on a black wool jacket, marten cuffs on huge sleeves of a cream beige coat, and an evening wrap, a cross between a cape and a stole, are featured.

A really fine selection of hats set off the Patou collection. Fabric combined with straw is pointed up with feathers, flowers and bows.

Spring fashion collections in Paris were presented with all the pomp and splendor of pre-war days. Two outstanding models were Jean Patou's "hanger" gown (left), made of dull black silk crepe with wide stripes of gunpiper banded in emerald green velvet ribbon, and the Jean Dresses number (right), which stressed the Zouave draped hemline with a deep band of applied leaves and an off-shoulder décolleté.

Ellen's Diary

day, when as a tiny fellow he commenced the trip, and when Karoly had caught up with him, he had quite crossed two bridges and was nearing the farthest field on this farm. But if he is as busy as he was this morning, James could not think of going to fish, neither could he begin to leave the premises, at least not before last words had been said.

For ours sold a mummie pig this morning—a youthful, lengthy lady of an animal, of an esteemed and long established line, one which James, in a way torn between desire and need, was "not to certain ourselves". The need, would likely have been longer endured, had they not been so hard pressed for living quarters at the moment.

There is also a disquieting angle to keeping brood sows, which James has discovered to his dismay these last years. He spoke of it to Mr. C. from the house on the hill this evening. "I find that I'm not nearly so fond of sitting up, as I once was!" So with their blessing and withal a little justly they gave over their claim to a new owner. It may be, to the latter, a first experience in caring for such a animal and it was James who wondered, after the truck had left the yard, if the new farmer had read the amusing but informative article: "Pigs are not people" by Mary Hammond in the March fifth issue of the Family Herald, when a "city couple learn about pigs and why they need special care at various stages of family life". There are incidents out of our own experience, which so far, I have not been able to live down. I suspect that when we are "as old as the hills" and perhaps live only in the past.

James opposite me by the fire at this time of year will ask: "Do you mind that cold night in March, Ellen—it's a long time ago now, though in a way it seems only yesterday—when I took the newly-born piglets in for you to heat some milk for them, and when I came back later, the milk was burning in the pan, and you were sound asleep in a chair?" That was an unseasonable night. The stars glittered coldly and distantly and I believe due to weariness the line of communication between house and barn had been somewhat neglected. Blue touched our line of hills today, pointing out the rich dark color of the evergreens and the white of the fields and meadows. At afternoon our men went with Mr. G. to the woodsawing at Rob's, leaving the women kind with time on their hands, but on orders to "keep an eye on things, while we're gone". And now an eye to the couch and to James napping on the couch and to Tabby beneath the stove and to Pard behind it tells me there should be a scattering—for bed time is at hand.

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night

LIMERICK, Eire, March 19—(CP)—Although British food program will call for substantially increased imports of store cattle from Eire, these will not be available in bulk for two or three years, leading exporters said. Lack of feeds and conversion of grasslands to tillage to maintain Eire's bread supply have curtailed herds.
