

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Attention to have you give up your youngsters for good, drop the whole project and let him go on alone. A temporary absence from them is all you could be expected to endure.

As for his family—don't worry about them. They are naturally under a great strain with their wayward son and brother. Probably if he straightens out, they'll be more agreeable to you.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My husband and I are quite upset over our 20-year-old son and would like your advice. He is a student at college, and has been dating a very lovely girl. He drives her to class every day and sees her three or four nights a week.

ANSWER: Both your son and the girl are being far from honorable in their actions. I'm sure they are both old enough to know it, too, regardless of his assurances to the contrary.

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm a freshman in high school and in love with a man 27 years old. He and his wife don't get along and are thinking of getting a divorce.

ANSWER: If you had given me your name and address I'd have written your mother to stop this crazy affair before it goes too far.

sunlight. "You'd hardly believe it could be" she commented.

"Hardly believe" that out of the snows of winter, again could come springtime blossoms? That for us, earth could perform her age-old miracle all in good time? That out of the sodden lifeless clay should spring again new life, winsome and fresh and lovely?

God gave us a wonderful brother, Whose memories will never grow old. He fashioned his smile out of sunshine

He is gone but his voice re-echoes, His touch is now unseen, His smile that was full of sunshine

Once upon a time in another garden away across the world a Grave opened because "it was written."

"I too, O Christ, denied you; And felt the dawn-winds blow Cold and gray upon my cheek

I too, sat silent while the scribes With cynic wisdom tried, Buffeted, reviled and mocked Condemned you—crucified.

But I have seen the dead arise. The spring wake fair and strong, And doubt has changed to soaring faith.

Despair to love and song." Until Monday—Diary— Good-night...

"Gone but not forgotten."

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Tomorrow THE auguries for this day warn that it would be regrettable to jump at conclusions in making decisions or agreements where calm, astute and logical consideration should be exercised in all aspect of thought and action.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may have a year in which vital matters come up for practical and unbiased judgment, un-tinctured by over-stimulated emotions or desires.

A child born on this day has splendid energy, initiative and enterprise for a successful and progressive career, free from the domination of others.

Day After Tomorrow The horoscope holds splendid auspices for a singularly happy, progressive and soul-satisfying purpose following celebration of an outstanding holiday of church and state, with all the joyous festivity and colorful gaiety due at the birth of spring.

For the Birthday Those whose birthday it is have an extraordinary year to look forward to. There are conflicting auguries—some inspiring and stimulating, others pointing to weird, illicit and inexplicable violations of all codes and conventions.

A child born on this day, while abundantly blessed with high spiritual, mental and psychological characteristics, may find a dangerous and insistent temptation to vibrate the opposing polarity of conduct.
