A STRONG CASE OF TELEPATHY

The files were so very busy. No doubt they buzzed in and out of the office window, they thought they were accomplishing a great deal, though it did not seem so to the young couple who looked on. Perhaps there are eyes that watch us—eyes to which our little ambitions and achievements seem as trivial as inconsequence as the busy files seem to us.

The May afternoon was more than warm; it was hot. Summery had been invited. Perhaps that was what made Jasmyne Meredith lend a little pink card to something she had resolved, and that she would not hear—the passionate, logical, altogether absurd love-making of a young fellow who would not have taken his university degree till a month later on. He was 21, but at 18 a girl believes herself already a woman.

She listened, and then she said, with a smile: "Why, you are a boy."

"A wise boy," he answered, "who knows enough to love you, and who will have all the longer time in which to love you because he begins early."

"I'm glad you are to be a lawyer," she answered somewhat irrelevantly, as it seemed to her. "I'm glad you are not a doctor," she ventured.

"Because I now see that you have, after all, a logical mind. Your powers of argument might be thrown away in any other profession. And then she added: "It takes a good while to get admitted to the bar."

"It shan't take very long in my case," he answered, "if you will promise me my reward for making haste."

"Oh, yes," she said, "I will come to court and hear your first plea."

"No, I will not," she cried a little scornfully.
"My first argument will be in private to my first witness, and be convinced by it."

"Ah, but you are not a lawyer yet—you must wait."

"You can keep me waiting as long as you please—it is for you to say—but I have told that I love you, and you can't get away from that. I'll trust you to remember, and when any other man tells you the same story—I will be his judge. You shall think of my sweet tolerance: "Dream you are a gentle youth; it may keep you from some worse folly."

"And you will not even be here for class days?"

"No, we sail on Saturday. My mother is half English by birth, and more than half at heart. She is sighing for Mayfair. We shall go to New York to-morrow."

"And this is good-by?"

He looked for a moment into her eyes.
His lips were attracted for hers, but he knew her too well to venture anything she would have the right to resent. He contented himself with a hand clasp; but there was a tone in his voice she would not forget as he said: "You will remember."

Three years went by, and still Mrs.
Meredith and her daughter had not returned to America. May and June found them in London. Later on they went to Homburg, beloved of the Princes of Wales and Mr. Chauncey Depew. They divided their winters between Rome and the Riviera. Robert Marsh heard of their movements only from the kind newspapers, for Jasmyne had decreed that there should be no correspondence. It would hinder him in his studies, she said, and she had no time for it.

"WHY, YOU ARE A BOY."

time for it. She thought of him now and then, and wondered a little whether —as she put it to herself—he was as foolish as ever. In fact, she thought of him most often at the times when she should have thought of him least—when some other man appeared inclined to tell her the old story.

She was a social success, even in London, where there were so many fair competitors, but she deftly managed to avoid proposals for the most part; and when she had to say no to say it so gently as to make no enemies. Her mother had not interfered hitherto.
Mrs. Meredith was too wise a woman not to hasten slowly, but now the time seemed to her to have come when a con-
-in-law would be desirable.

"You are 21 now," she said to Jas-myne, musing. Of course you can easily remember my birthday, since you are also a Mayflower."

"Yes, and a year before I was 21 I had married your father. He never caused me but one sorrow, and that was when he died. I wish you as happy a lot as my own, and I think you are old enough to marry."

Jasmyne lifted her pretty eyes in such wise that they asked a question.

"Yes," her mother answered misgivingly, "perhaps you have not seen, but I who have lived twice as long as you can see clearly that Lord Gainsford is only waiting the opportunity to ask you to be Lady Gainsford."

"That old fellow!" cried Jasmyne, in-reverently.

"He is 39," said Mrs. Meredith, smil-ing. "That does not seem so venerable to most of the world, and it seems to you.
Do you see anything else in him to complain of?"

"I haven't thought. Why should I?
He is very well, I suppose, but I see no reason why I should care for him more than for another."

"Ah, well, you must know him bet-ter."

And the opportunity was not long in coming. It seemed as if fate were on the side of his lordship. Wherever the Merediths went they were sure to meet him—and he let it be seen clearly enough that it was for Jasmyne's sake he had come. He did not trouble him-

PRIVATELY DISCUSSED.
Montreal Physicians beginning Largely to Prescribe a New Remedy.

MONTREAL, July 15.—There is still a good deal of talk here among all classes over the recent despatches which appeared in so many Canadian papers, relative to the cure of Mr. G. H. Kent, of Ottawa, from Bright's Disease. Although the merits of the case have not been openly discussed at any of the meetings of the medical society, there has been a good deal of private conference and the im-pression which the report of the recovery has made is evidenced in the fact that a good many physicians have prescribed Dodd's Kidney Pills in their private practice. No higher testimony than this could be given to any remedy, the reluctance of medical men to admit any good in proprietary medicines being well known."

98,000 policies, and $300,000,000 of Insurance in force, attest the popularity of the Company, its system and the confidence of the public.

IT IS THE PEOPLE'S INSURANCE, and is sold at about half the rates charged by old system companies. During the first three months of 1895 it was thorou-ghly examined by the Insurance Depart-
