KING COLE TEA Always Popular

The Thorpe Affair

By Phillip Leely

Terry and Kay sat alone, watching the gyrations of the dancers, the antics of those who had become drunk early, the campaigns of the "hostesses" on the lone patrons. Terry's eyes took in every man who entered, studying and watching. There were men whose reserved, quiet attitudes indicated underworld association. It was they whom Terry watched most closely. It was past 8 o'clock now. Terry leaned close to Kay and whispered. "Be ready."

The dancing couples were interrupted by a commotion at the back of the room. Near the orchestra platform a tall, slim man was struggling with a hostess, trying to block her protesting hands and to press his lips to hers. Terry noticed that the others in the room looked on and laughed. All but one.

The girl began to beat her partner with her fists, but her struggling was futile. The slim man held her tightly, was forcing her backward while his lips drew nearer to hers. A shorter, heavier man drew up to him, put his arm on the tall man's shoulder, whirled him around. A fist shot out, and there was a gleam of steel. A woman screamed. Men were shouting. "He's got a knife!" a shrill voice cried.

A gruffer, harder voice shouted: "The lights! Turn out the lights!" So suddenly that no one had a chance to know what was happening, the room was in darkness and shouting, screaming, fighting persons were moving, pushing, falling about the room in panic.

"Terry!" Kay called, frightened. "Terry, where are you?" She felt herself pushed about, she felt hands on her shoulders moving her. Before she realized it she was sitting again. In the midst of the bedlam she heard grunts, and something hard hitting something yielding. She felt a mad urge to scream, but somehow her throat seemed constricted.

CHAPTER XII

Seconds passed like eons. The noise, the movement the horror made the whole thing seem like a wild nightmare. Then, as suddenly as they had gone out, the lights came on.

Kay found herself sitting at the opposite side of the table to where she had been. Terry stood near her former seat, a gun, gripped by the muzzle in his hand. On the floor lay a short, thin man, unmoving. Another man lay unconscious against the next table. And as she looked and her eyes opened wider, Terry grinned.

"What—what happened?" she gasped. "They were overcome by surprise. When they started to get rough with what they thought was you, the shock of finding me there was too much for them."

Knelling over the prostrate figure of the short man on the floor, he grasped the shoulder and turned him over. "Why," Kay cried, "it's Paul Mills!" Mills opened his eyes as Terry held him and started to climb to his feet. The other unconscious man was also stirring. But there was no more desire for battle in either of them.

Terry handed the gun to Kay. "Stay here and keep them covered. I've got a call to make." He stepped into the phone booth to call the police, but before that he called the Sun and turned in the story. He'd forgotten all about his resolution to quit, now. He had discovered compensations for being a reporter.

A few minutes later, in the presence of two policemen who had handcuffed the prisoners, Terry explained the parts he and Kay had played in the case.

"But," one of the officers demanded "what makes you think that Mills done it?"

Taking a clipping from his pocket, Terry opened it to him. It was from the personal column of the Sun advertising section. It read: "KAY H.—Meet me at the Blue Rock Club at 8 tonight to discuss the problem of T.—Terry."

"When Mills found out Miss Howard knew something about the murder, he was afraid she'd spill it and he'd be caught. So he lured her into the hands of a hired kidnaper by using an ad in the paper. When she got away, he had to try to get her again and keep her from talking. So when he saw this ad in the paper he put two and two together and decided to take advantage of the situation, just as we wanted him to. He had that fight over the hostess staged as a camouflage, so that when the lights went out we'd be taken off guard. He didn't figure on my trapping him, instead of him trapping us."

"What made you think Stanton didn't do the killing, though?" asked Kay. "That's one thing I couldn't understand. And what was there about Mills that made you suspect him?"

GLENALDALE H. AND S. The monthly meeting of the Glenaladale Home and School Association was held the second week in September. The meeting opened with prayer led by Father Phelan. The President, Mrs. Basil MacDonald welcomed Father Phelan to the Association and then read the aims of the Home and School Association. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. A report regarding the dental clinic was given and a letter from Dr. O'neary was read. The teachers thanked the members for the foot ball and volley ball that had been recently purchased for the school. It was moved by James Hughes and seconded by William Lacey that play ground equipment be supplied for the younger children. On motion of Mrs. Patrick Mullen seconded by Mrs. Lacey Cod Liver Oil capsules are to be purchased for the children. Mrs. Patrick Mullen and Mrs. Cusack were appointed to visit the school for the month of September. Father Phelan congratulated the members on their interest in the school and on the great work they were doing. He assured them that he would be happy to assist them in any way possible. Plans were then discussed regarding a married couple's dance to be held in the hall Sept. 26th. On motion of Patrick Mullen, seconded by Basil MacDonald the meeting adjourned with the singing of the National Anthem.

CLYDE RIVER W.M.S. The September meeting of the W.M.S. of Clyde River Presbyterian Church was held on Thursday evening, Sept. 13th, at the home of Mrs. John Docherty with an attendance of twelve members and six visitors. The President presided with Miss Joyce Nicholson as organist. Theme for meeting was "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are ripe already to harvest." Call to worship was taken from the 27th Psalm which was read respectively. Mrs. James Beer then led in prayer followed by the singing of hymn No. 212, after which each one read verses from the 4th chapter of St. John. Mrs. Nicholson then led in prayer. Hymn No. 590 closed the devotional part. Minutes were read and approved. Several readings on the mission work of British Guiana and Formosa were given. Business consisted of a letter of thanks to be written to Mrs. Robert McGregor for a donation of hymn books to the church. The Lord's Prayer was then repeated and meeting closed with the singing of hymn No. 483 and the Mizpah Benediction. Lunch was served and a social hour followed. Next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. Armstrong Beer.
