

85th Congress Convenes Today; Host Of Issues

WASHINGTON (Reuters)—Congress reconvenes today after a five-month recess with overriding interest focused on how legislators will react to the proposed "Eisenhower doctrine" for the Middle East.

Western diplomats here seemed generally confident that President Eisenhower throws his full prestige behind it, the plan to provide economic aid and United States military protection to the Middle East will be assured of powerful congressional backing.

But storm signals were flying from Capitol Hill for a different reason. For many years the so-called northern liberals in Congress have been fighting for stronger guarantees of equal citizenship rights for Negroes.

These efforts have been repeatedly foiled in the Senate, where southern opponents of civil rights have thrown up a verbal blockade in the form of interminable discussion which prevents a vote.

This right of filibuster is to be debated in the first few days of the new Congress, when the Senate moves to adopt its rules of procedure. But the present rule requires a vote by 64 of the 96 senators to limit debate and thus end a filibuster. The liberals want to see this rule revised, perhaps to two-thirds of the senators present.

Political observers forecast that removal of the filibuster would permit passage of legislation providing for federal prosecution of anyone caught intimidating voters in a national election.

Apart from what promises to be a lively battle on this issue, little excitement was in prospect for the next few days, which are expected to be mostly taken up with routine matters such as election of committee chairmen.

President Eisenhower is due to deliver his annual state of the union message in person Jan. 10. This major address, which traditionally outlines the administration's legislative program, will mark the start of the real business of lawmaking.

Later in the month Congress will receive the president's budget message and his annual economic report.

With the Democrats still holding a narrow margin of control in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, the president and his Republican administration are faced with a delicate task of persuasion and liaison.

But the Democratic leadership in both chambers, in the shape of Senator Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn, both of Texas, has promised to avoid undue partisanship especially in foreign affairs.

Big Increase In Canada's Hydroelectric Capacity

OTTAWA (CP)—Canada boosted her hydroelectric capacity to 13,356,148 horsepower in 1956 but still was using less than 28 per cent of her waterpower resources.

That was the highlight of a review of hydro-electric development issued today by the resources department. It forecast the addition of some 4,000,000 more horsepower in the next two years as new power plants now under construction begin to hum.

The review said 845,000 new horsepower was added to the national total during the year, 6,000 horsepower more than was brought into service in 1955. More than 500,000 of that was in Quebec.

Quebec continued to lead in hydro-electric development with the addition of 514,300 horsepower. The greatest single addition was the 450,000 horsepower brought into operation at Quebec's Bersimis No. 1 development on the Bersimis River.

The review forecast that with present construction some 4,000,000 more horsepower will be added in Quebec in the next five or six years.

Hats Of The Famous Help Education Of Young Minds

By JANE BECKER
Canadian Press Staff Writer
MONTREAL (CP)—Hats fashioned for the heads of world-famous persons are being used by the World University Service to help raise funds for needy students.

The funds are raised through the sale of international handicrafts which tour Canadian campuses annually in what has become known as a treasure hunt. To attract buyers, the Canadian WUS division rigged up an international hatrack. Kings, queens, and governments all over the world were asked to donate famous or typical headwear to fill the pegs.

What came back was a varied and colorful array, symbolizing membership or national fervor. There are 22 hats so far, with 28 others on the way. By the time the current tour of 36 campuses is completed they will have helped WUS provide $100,000 of foreign-made handicrafts for international student aid, said managing director Mrs. Ethel Mulvany.

Israel's "tembel hat" is a cotton, khaki-colored cap not unlike the pork-pie models worn by North American "teen-agers a few years ago. But its significance to Israel is great.

"The tembel cap symbolizes a state of mind in our country," wrote an Israeli government official, "introduced by the first young Israeli pioneers. It now goes on the heads of youngsters, respectable citizens in their gardens, and country folk at work. We wear it to show we are throwing away formalities and reverting to the joys of youth."

On another hatrack peg sits a tall, conical sombrero made of palm fibre, worn by Cuban peasants. Besides warding off the sun their "sombbrero mambi" reminds them of Cuba's war of independence from Spain.

Other hats have had their varying roles in nation-building. Indonesia's piñi speaks of 50 years of freedom to its wearers. The hat of Korea, brought from the Ming dynasty in China 600 years ago, was once the headgear of aristocrats, now is a kind of national garb among elderly peasants in remote villages. Made from horse mane, the gat is worn with an under-hat, known as a gamtoo.

NOTED CORRESPONDENTS
"Some of our letters are almost as interesting as the hats," said Mrs. Mulvany. Cabinet councillor N. Bouropoulos of the Athens royal palace wrote of the "deep appreciation of his majesty for the kind thought of World University Service in requesting a hat."

There was a note from Prime Minister St. Laurent in Ottawa, saying he would send his 1954 world-tour fedora for the collection. His 1953 election campaign hat wasn't available, he added, as he would probably need it for the next campaign, expected in 1957.

Through her secretary, Princess Grace of Monaco said that "due to previous commitments" she couldn't supply the huge hat she wore on arrival in Monaco. Sir Winston Churchill also sent his regrets. He'd been asked for his UN charter-signing hat. President Eisenhower's household correspondent explained that if the president filled one such request, he would have to fill hundreds.

Early this year the WUS treasure van became self-supporting, repaying the last of an initial $56,000 loan. By 1957 sales from its five years of touring are expected to total $400,000. About 55 per cent is held in WUS coffers for future use, another eight per cent is used for operating expenses of the three-truck caravan. The rest goes directly for international student aid ear - marked this year to health services in India and Japan and student lodging in Nepal.

Mrs. Mulvany is planning a different hatrack for the 1957 van. It's to hold a collection of academic headwear - ancient and modern - gathered from about 150 of the world's educational institutions.

Let's Talk It Over

Some people consider making New Year's resolutions utter foolishness. Whether it happens on New Year's or "Eat more fish" week, it is never foolish to resolve to be better than you are. Your resolve may last for only a short time, but it stamps you as a person aspiring to higher levels of thought and action. This is not to be confused, of course, with the type of people who keep telling their friends of their repentance of wrongdoing and of their intention to do better next time. Very often there is no sincerity in these mawkish demonstrations of remorse. They are voiced merely to enlist sympathy or to fend off the listener's righteous indignation.

But the person, who without fanfare or fuss, and with sincerity and determination, resolves to rid himself of some bad habit or to adopt some worthwhile activity is better than he was by virtue of the resolution itself. If he fails too soon or too often, he may be characterized as a person with a wishbone instead of a backbone, but backbones, like football legs, are at least partly, heritages from our ancestry, and a wishbone is better than nothing. We doubt very much the accuracy of the pronouncement that "Hell is paved with good intentions." We believe rather that hell is paved with cynicism, self-righteousness and complacency. We think, however, that for people (and their name is legion) who find it difficult to keep those new year's resolutions from getting ship-wrecked over the long 12-month haul, there should be a custom of "New month's resolutions". On the first of every month, make new ones. This would give the weak-willed boys and girls a chance to score a few victories.
