River Mud Causes Trouble On Icebreaker d'Iberville

By JOHN YORSTON
Canadian Press Staff Writer
MONTREAL (CP) — The big icebreaker d'Iberville tied up in Montreal East Thursday night and repairs were started on her engine water condensers — tiny tubes the thickness of a finger — which forced the ship to halt operations for two hours Thursday.

The ship burst through a 10-mile jam of snow and ice rafted 15 feet thick above Sorel, Que., then had easy sailing through 25 miles of open channel to Montreal East.

Temporary repairs to the engine were made Thursday near Sorel. The ship turned broadside to the current, her nose anchored in ice outside the channel while repairs were effected.

Permanent repairs and replacements were to be made Thursday night in preparation for a fresh assault today on the grounded 35-foot-thick ice mass of Montreal harbor as the breaker attempts to free 13 ocean freighters trapped here.

START FREEING JOB
The 6,000-ton d'Iberville is to go in after the trapped ships today — something she and her 68 officers and men have been trying to do since Dec. 5.

The ship started in Montreal Tuesday, clearing 1 1/2 miles of the thick heavy ice that rests on the harbor bottom. Mud dragged up by this ice was partly to blame for her engine trouble Thursday. Some of it had seeped into the condensers.

Late Monday she was forced to go downstream to crack jams which formed around Sorel, from ice she sent from Montreal.

Meanwhile the smaller, older icebreaker, N.B. McLean, worked a 10-mile jam, last barrier between Montreal East and Trois-Rivieres. The Ernest LaPointe kept ice moving in tricky Lake St. Peter.

The engine trouble was the latest in a series of bad breaks that have kept the d'Iberville away from Montreal and the trapped ships. She has been called back downstream a number of times to battle huge jams and has been stalled by storms and poor visibility.

DONG TIEUP POSSIBLE
Meanwhile department of transport officials indicated the ships may have to stay in Montreal until the spring break-up if they are not freed by Monday.

Five of the department's six icebreakers are employed in trying to free the vessels and pressure is being put on the government to send three of them back to their normal winter duties along the north shore of the St. Lawrence and in the Maritimes.

"Another development" the Canadian Exporters Association sent a telegram to Transport Minister Hees urging "very drastic measures" be taken to free the ships.

The telegram said the tie-up "is creating a most serious situation... which can be detrimental to Canada's export trade and reputation."

BRISTOL

Friends of Mr. J.B. Jay, the village postmaster, will be sorry to learn of his sudden illness that necessitated his removal to the Charlottetown Hospital last week, where his condition is reported as improved. Mr. Jay suffered an attack while watching TV at his home. We all hope his illness is not as serious as was first reported, and that he will soon be back at his desk.

Mr. Reginald O'Brien, who is with the Canadian Marconi Company, spent Christmas with his children and his parents here. Mr. O'Brien was stationed in Newfoundland for some time after a long spell in Labrador. The work of the Marconi Company takes them over a lot of country.

Mr. P. R. Sinnott, was in the city on Friday on business, like many of those who follow the carpenter trade, his job in the city has closed down for the winter months. Several others from this vicinity have also been laid off for some time at least.

Mr. Norman Conohan of the Patriot staff, whose home is here, continues to make the round trip daily despite the chilly weather. Norman has been with the newspaper for many years, starting as a boy. He has travelled back and forth for many years, but if the going gets tough he will stop in for a while in the winter time.

January is here and now we see once again the smoke curling up from small buildings and workshops and hear again the rattle of hammers, as those hardy fishermen again start building new traps. There is nothing for the job, it's all expense, and board yourself, but it has to be done to have a fleet of traps ready for the spring season.

Mr. Eddie Clark, who is a carpenter and boat builder in forms us he will build some new boats this winter in his shop, and will get underway immediately. Mr. Clark has a well-heated building for the job and his boats are well known. "If Clark build's them they are good boats".

Mr. and Mrs. Anselm Lapiere were business visitors to the city last week. Like so many who spend the summer at the seaside, their business is over. During the spring and summer they operate the only place at Red Head shore, serving meals to the fishermen and the public.

During the busy season they feed more than a hundred people a day and pack some eighty lunch-cans to be taken out in the boats. Scores of comments are heard on the wonderful meals and services at this dining place by-the-sea for the working people and hearty fishermen.

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Burns and children, were holiday visitors here, visiting their old homes and other friends around the village.

It is learned with regret of the passing of David Egan at Mt. Stewart. With the passing of Mr. Egan, the line of old-timers in this vicinity grows shorter and the circle grows thin.

Speaker Backs Professional Status For Agriculturists

Increased professionalization among agricultural scientists and technical agriculturists was advocated in a speech delivered in Charlottetown last night by Dr. J. L. Bolton, president of the Agricultural Institute of Canada.

Speaking to the members of the Island branch of the Institute, at a special supper meeting held at the Rendezvous Restaurant, Dr. Bolton said that acquiring professional status would not only benefit the individual but would serve to protect the agricultural industry against persons practicing agriculture in a manner detrimental to the industry itself.

has got underway in full swing, with several teams in the running, despite the hockey rage at this season, bowling seems to take the lead. Both men and women are following the bowling and doctors say its life real thing to keep the waist line normal.

Rabbit hunting has been reported as very good, despite the fact hunters with dogs say the going is tough. The old style of snares has paid off, and one man was noticed last week with ten big white fellows, one morning's catch, and he says there are plenty of them left in the bushes. Some buyers are reported as paying one-fifty a pair for rabbits, and for those who love the stew and pie they are cheap at that.

ties after spending the holidays in Boston, and New York City. The girls all report a lovely holiday trip to the big cities.

Vancouver Development Plan Touches Off Protest Storm

VANCOUVER (CP)—The latest and biggest of several recent plans for new industrial developments around Vancouver has raised a storm of protest.

But the backers of the $100,000,000 project are holding firmly to their intention of reclaiming 19 1/2 square miles of mud flats in an area which those opposing the plan call the "finest potential playground" on the lower British Columbia mainland.

Boundary Bay Terminals Ltd., proposer of the scheme; is scheduled to apply for a provincial government lease of the area at a public hearing in nearby New Westminster Jan. 21.

The area is in Boundary Bay, a sheltered inlet 15 miles southwest of here which also contains the resort villages of White Rock and Crescent Beach. The Point Roberts Peninsula, half of which is in the United States, separates the bay from the Georgia Strait.

Proposers of the scheme, led by realtor John L. Boulter, plan to reclaim the 19 1/2 square miles — half the size of Vancouver — by constructing a 12-mile long, 24-foot high dike.

A $10,000,000 "initial phase" is planned to take care of this and would also include provision of a deep-sea harbor, a drainage system to take care of the needs of nearby municipalities, pump houses, roads, freight sheds and a railway connection.

But the plan, expected to mean employment for some 10,000, has met stiff opposition from recreation groups.

The lower mainland parks advisory board charges the project is "a promotional scheme to get cheap industrial land." Robert Maitland, chairman of the Vancouver park board, called it "a recreational land steal."

Boulter promised the plan would provide a 1,000 acre park and new sand beaches. Stuart LeFaux, secretary of the lower mainland parks board, said this is "just a come-on."

Residents of nearby areas are split over the issue. Crescent Beach residents claim the development would result in both water and air pollution, while others, including Social Credit MLA George Massey of Delta municipality, have warned park commissioners to "mind their own business and keep their noses out of our affairs."

"The country is hollering about unemployment and then everyone criticizes an attempt to locate industry in our own area," Massey said.

"We can look after our own affairs and we will do nothing to spoil available recreational facilities."

E. Point CGIT Hold Service

The "Pearl McClare" group of the C.G.I.T. held its annual Vesper Service in the East Point Baptist Church.

While the traditional decorations were used on one large tree and elsewhere in the church the C.G.I.T. colors of blue and white were used to form a background and to illuminate the small trees on the platform.

Leaders, Mrs. Walter Dixon and Mrs. Lyman Rose and the Canadian Girls in Training dressed in uniform entered the church singing the professional hymn, "O Come All Ye Faithful" and took their places in the choir and on the platform.

The worship was led by Mrs. Rose, and the story "The Shepherd Who Didn't Go" was related by Mrs. Dixon. Passages of scripture telling the Christmas story were read by Birdie Coffin, Jean Bruce, Norma Bennett and Fern Bruce.

The choir under the direction of the organist, Mrs. Clinton Stewart, led in the singing of the congregational hymns and rendered special selections during the service. "How Great Thou Art" was sung by a trio of C.G.I.T. girls, Fern Bruce, Noreen Rose and Norma Bennett.

Following the candle-lighting service which was performed by Noreen Rose, Edith MacGregor and Myrtle MacGregor the girls stood to repeat the C.G.I.T. purpose. The girls with their leaders left the platform during the singing of the recessional hymn. After which the pastor, Mr. Molins, came forward and thanked all who helped make the service a success. He then pronounced the benediction.
