CONTRACT BRIDGE

By B. JAY BECKER

South dealer. Both sides vulnerable. NORTH 10982 AJS A87 A92 WEST K5 10984 Q1053 KJ4 EAST 6 7852 9442 7653 SOUTH AQJ743 KJ KQ Q108

The bidding: South West North East 1 Pass 3 Pass 4 NT Pass 5 Pass 6 Dia.

Opening lead—ten of hearts. In a great many hands declarer does not know exactly the line of play that will succeed. The best he can do is feel his way as the play proceeds.

Sometimes clues appear sufficiently early in the play to guide declarer to the method that is most likely to succeed. In the hand shown here, South managed to make the slam contract as a result of a powerful clue obtained during the bidding.

West should not have doubled. It was a dreadful bid. Aside from the fact that he could not possibly point to two sure defensive tricks, there was the danger that he could not get even one—since both his kings had been placed in jeopardy by North's five spade bid which showed three aces. But besides this there was the additional danger that the double might give the show away by alerting declarer where the adverse strength resided, and so permit South to take advantage of the knowledge thus obtained.

And so it was. It became obvious as soon as dummy appeared that West had to have the king of spades for his double. Declarer won the heart lead with the king and did not even bother to go to dummy to take a spade finesse.

He cashed the ace of spades, overtook the queen of hearts with the ace, and discarded a club on the jack of hearts. He then handed West his trump trick, and it was curtains for West.

A heart return would give South a ruff—discard, thus avoiding a club loser. A diamond return would be equally fatal, since it would give declarer an extra diamond trick. And a low club return by West would permit South to duck in dummy and score an extra club trick.

Without the double, declarer might well have chosen to rely on both the spade and diamond finesses. In effect, West tried to gain an extra 100 points by doubling. Instead he lost not only the 100 points he might have scored by passing, but also the 1,660 points North-South tallied.
