DON'T DESPAIR. 50 YEARS. SHARP'S BALMS OF HOREHOUND. WILL CURE YOU. GEORGE R. HUGHES, Charlottetown.

QUEER CLUE

There are certain buildings which reveal to you, just as there are certain people. Martin Swift's wholesale liquor store was one of the sort. It was dingy, unclean and out of place among its neighbors.

I repeat, nine years passed away, and I never entered the store or saw the proprietor. I would walk right into the place and see and speak with Martin Swift. This was in November, and the Swifts were about to go to the States.

I found the second story divided off by a plank partition. The west wall had been removed to empty the room, and the east half, which looked down on the street, was divided into two rooms—a sitting room and a bedroom.

The old man had been killed by a bullet through the heart. On the hearth of the room was a little heap of tobacco ashes. As they sat talking he was smoking. Having finished his pipe, he reached out his right hand and knocked under the ash-tray the bronzed pipe.

"This is the only clue," I said as I laid the golden shell in her hand. "Well, I don't deny it was mine." "Put it carefully away. My work is finished—good day."

ST. PATRICK'S, 1895.

Saint Patrick's Day is drawing nigh, Kept sacred it must be; Saint Patrick's soul is blest on high, A happy saint is he.

Righteous man Saint Patrick was, His name we do revere; He well loved God's holy laws And loved him most sincere.

Where all is joy and peace, Saint Patrick's crown is shining bright With saints in perfect bliss.

Great numbers will each other greet Upon Saint Patrick's Day, So honor him each year they meet, And bands of music play.

God bless the crowd Saint Patrick's Day, And fill their hearts with cheer; And may they pass their time away In love while they are here.

At East Queen's election morning, "But where shall I gang," Prince Rupert cried, They thought to have Davie at Glasgow and Clyde.

Then the wily pleader devised a plan, Saying to himself, "I'll get in where I can." He did this Barn-yard Rupert—and crowd: "W'f honest Davie out of the road, I'll now reap the harvest o' that."
