"It does continue cool!" the younger farmer smiled; waving at parting. Frostily the new week came to us. We could enjoy the bright crispness—or suffer it. In any event, winter was passing. In the offing, around a bend of way, in a summery spot we knew, wild roses, subtly and exquisitely fragrant would in the turn of time lift dewy coral cups to the morning. And before that, in tune with the robins' songs lilacs would blush and bloom in Island places, even marking along sites of gardens loved and lost, planted with high hopes tenderly in days of the long, long ago.

Cool, yes, but on farms this is a time of winter peace. A nice time. A convenient season, before the cares of the springtime shall bind them to home, for busier seasons will not grant. Tiding of those now abroad drift back to us nicely at Alderlea. We can appreciate how exceedingly good such excursions are, and for the most part they are in the nature of fond dreams come true.

We too go excursions. When the dishes are done and the house tidied, we slip on our seven-league boots and go out over the hills. Or on mild, smiling days we embark on a fairy-land and set sail on a sunny blue sea. What friendly doors, what nice harbors we come to, and goodly visits we have!

It was we believe to greet for the first time another new grandchild which recently took an Island couple from their farm to visit with members of their family now settled in Ontario.

"And here we are at Niagara Falls this evening! It is a wonderful sight" she wrote on the card we received today. And it was good to hear, for always we too go a-journeying in mind with our friends. And come back to our own inglenook at night, to

of the wood-fires and the rooms of this house caught against the breast of this island valley, rimmed round by the hills.

A day, this, to enjoy out of doors the crisp of the sunshine. A night to turn off the lights for a long minute, and with Mack our company who declares he too "just loves the sight," watch the moon "rise and shine" in all her glory behind the branches of the tall yard-trees.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.

Make Believe In Our Minds That We Travel With Friends

"Not many flowers in the border today!" a visitor, going down the driveway, observed with an infectious chuckle this morning. He was travelling by horse and sleigh, and was warmly clad against the cheer of a day which along yard and field, glittered with the cold-crystal of frost-gems. Mack was with him, snug in the sleigh-ropes, smiling, obviously well pleased to be catching this novel ride to his classes.
