Celebrates His First Mass At Home Church

Rev. John H. Sullivan, S. J., son of Mrs. Sullivan, Summerside and the late Wm. Sullivan, celebrated his first solemn High Mass in his home church, St. Pauls, Summerside, yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. Assisting at the Mass were Rev. Douglas MacNeill, as deacon; Rev. Father O'Hanley, sub-deacon; and Father Sullivan's two brothers, Enoch and Arthur.

The church was filled to capacity with friends of the newly ordained priest. Rt. Rev. Mgr. MacLellan, V. G., preached the sermon which was very appropriate and inspiring, dealing particularly with the duties of a priest and his high calling. The men's choir assisted with the music of the Mass. Rev. Bennett MacDonald, Grand River and Rev. Fr. Paquet of Boston, were in the sanctuary.

Rev. Fr. Sullivan received his early education at the Summerside High School and St. Dunstan's College, Charlottetown, graduating from there in 1926. He later joined the Jesuit order at the Immaculate Conception College in Montreal and was ordained last Sunday by Rt. Rev. economic sense for a long conflict. Speaking at the East Prussian Fair at Koenigsberg, State Secretary Fritz Landfried of the Economics Ministry said Germany is "prepared on the economic front."

"We know we could win no war if we were defeated in the economic field," Landfried said. "Therefore we have armed ourselves economically, so we could throw the full life and fighting power of the nation into the contest should a hostile world oblige us to do so."

offices from Friday to Monday. The Sunday Press too reflected a changed tone.

The Conservative Sunday Observer headed its "Critical Week Ahead" story "The Sunday Pictorial (independent) said this week may well be the most critical since the Great War."

The Sunday Times (Ind.) warned "any attempt to retreat at another victim's expense what has been done this year by Germany at Czecho-Slovakia on by Italy at Albania will bring the Union Jack into conflict."

It added, however, that if "Germany could return to spheres where negotiation is possible, could substitute calm discussions for violence and threats, she would not find her way blocked by London."

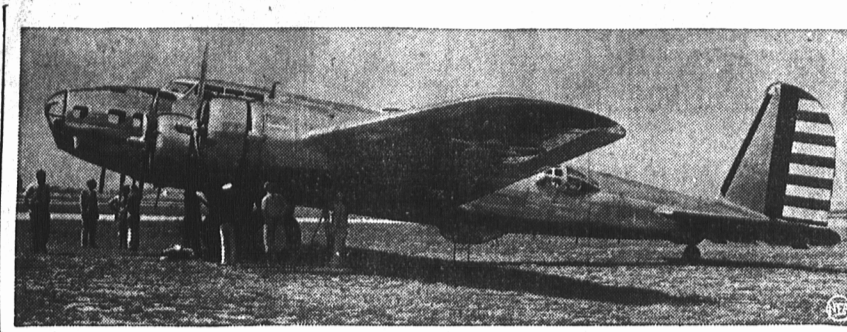

The Sunday Dispatch (Ind.) diplomatic correspondent said he had learned the ministers will "give further orders to increase Britain's war preparedness."

"They will also consider," he wrote, "whether to make a public statement reiterating Britain's interpretation of the 'ordre de bataille'—that British assistance will be given immediately and with the whole of our resources in the event of Poland taking up arms in defence of her national independence."

According to the Sunday Express (Ind.) the ministers "will give orders which will result in Britain being prepared for any possible situation in the next few weeks."

"The Boiler Kid" Breaks Bonds Of Iron Barrel In Life—And Love

By NEA Service

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. — The "Boiler Kid" is a bridegroom now, and thereby proves that life—real life—can be lived in an iron lung.

The throbbing beat of the artificial respirator, on which hangs the life of Frederick B. Snite, Jr., kept time for the romance that flowered in his one-man prison.

When the 29-year-old youth married Miss Teresa Larkin of Dayton, O., in his River Forest home he added another achievement to a career that has refused to be bound by the steel cage which keeps him alive.

For more than three years, young Snite's lungs have been partially paralyzed—but his spirit hasn't. He dubbed himself "the boiler kid." He's mailed out Christmas cards, illustrated with a sketch of his "prison," plastered with travel stickers.

And, since he has stricken with infantile paralysis in China, Snite has done almost everything a young fellow likes to do. He has traveled among other things, some 30,000 miles.

Each year, Fred's folks winter at Miami Beach, Fla. The lung, equipped with portable batteries, is rolled into a specially built automobile trailer, and son goes along.

Through a periscope, attached to the iron lung and focused on a mirror above Snite's head, he has watched football games, seen horses pound down the turf, looked at some of the world's scenic spots.

Fred and his cage are familiar to race track fans himself. And, while he rested in front of the shrine, he saw other pilgrims about him and uttered a prayer for them.

Upon his return in June, he made a tour of the New York World's Fair.

It was back on April 1, 1936, Fred Snite was placed in a respirator at Peiping, China. Fresh out of college, he was accompanying his parents on a world tour, appeared headed towards a high position in his father's firm. Fate had a different idea.

It was 14 months before the boy could be brought home from China. The father is reported to have spent $50,000 to bring Fred back to the United States, still more in efforts to cure him.

Some progress has been made. Snite is now able to spend several hours a day in a "vest" pocket respirator," made of aluminum and rubber. This small artificial lung weighs but 9 1/2 pounds in contrast to the 900-pound machine which is his regular "home."

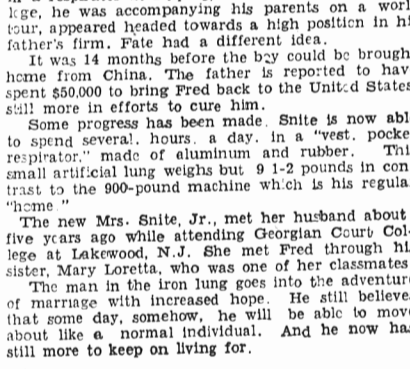

The new Mrs. Snite, Jr., met her husband about five years ago while attending Georgian Court College at Lakewood, N. J. She met Fred through his sister, Mary Loretta, who was one of her classmates.

The man in the iron lung goes into the adventure of marriage with increased hope. He still believes that some day, somehow, he will be able to move about like a normal individual. And he now has still more to keep on living for.

The "boiler kid" does the fair: Witnessing a three-dimensional polaroid movie as Grover Whalen's guest.

Prayer for divine help: The scene at the Shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes, from which young Snite returned recently.

at Hialeah and Tropical Park. Snite attended a night gridiron game between the University of Miami and Duquesne. He's followed the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame, his alma mater.

Fred plays cards and chess. While another person sits in for him at the table, he watches the games through his mirror, directing his substitute how to play the hand or move the chess men.

In order to thank thousands of well-wishers for their encouraging messages, he has edited a newspaper. The publication is mimeographed, goes to press whenever the editor has enough material. Fred dictates the stories, made up mostly of personal experiences, to a nurse. President Roosevelt himself is on the mailing list.

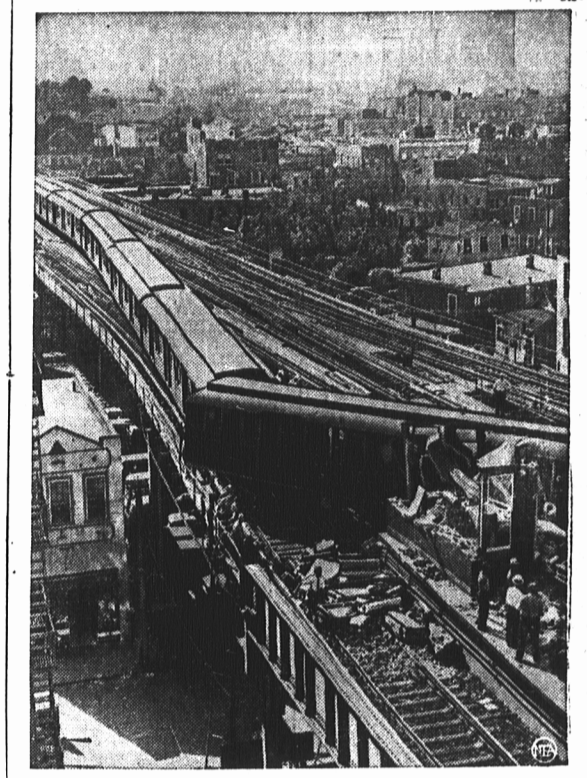

Snite has been featured in radio broadcasts, several of which were nationwide appeals for funds to combat infantile paralysis. He has toured France in the iron lung, visiting famous cathedrals, talking with peasants, and even lunching in a fashionable Parisian restaurant, a party highlighted by champagne sipped through a straw.

That European trip is an illustration of Snite's philosophy. The purpose was to visit the famous Shrine of Our Lady of Lourdes, where many invalids claim to have found release from their afflictions. The lung was loaded onto a railroad car at Miami in May, transported to New York, carried onto the liner Normandie for the trans-Atlantic voyage.

Yet, Fred went to give thanks, not to ask for lightweight "vest" model respirator.

Out of the iron cage: The only respite Fred B. Snite, Jr., gets from his mechanical lung is in this liner Normandie for the trans-Atlantic voyage.

An elevated train accident in Brooklyn, N. Y., that injured 22 persons, was saved from being a major tragedy by the lucky break pictured above. The car of the train, crowded with Coney Island-bound Sunday pleasure seekers, jumped a switch and crashed with terrific force into the power house in the foreground. Only the fact that it was tightly wedged between the house and the second coach saved it from plunging to the street 50 feet below.
