QUIZ

That the experts disagree with one another in some bidding situations is nowhere brought out more forcibly than in the eight-question quiz submitted to them regularly each month by the Bridge World magazine.

Here is one question recently asked a panel of 50 experts which brought forth a variety of views and assorted comments:

7.45—Rawhide
8:00—Chansonettes
8:30—As You Like It "Piano Recital"
8:45—Fishing with Bill Greenaway
9:00—Touch of Greasepaint

9:30—Now I Ask You

10:30—Who's The Composer
11:00—CBC National News
11:30—On Liberty
12:00—Here's The Weather and Sign Off

What do you now bid? The panel's vote: 30 for three notrump; 15 for double; 4 for four clubs; 1 for pass.

R. Rosen, Detroit. "Three notrump. A choice of evils. Admittedly, we may lose five diamonds at once, but if we double three spades, we cannot expect North to bid three notrump with Q-x or J-x in diamonds. A four club bid loses forever the chance of a notrump game; and a pass is even more craven."

A. C. Bell, Chicago. "Double. Three notrump, four clubs and five clubs could all work out well, but we consider the double the most flexible call. This double is not made solely on spades—partner should be able to sense that the preemptive spade bid has given me a problem and that he is at liberty to try for game at notrump or a suit with the right type of hand."

By ED STAFFOR Canadian Press Writer Bowing to the inevitable, Prime Minister Nehru has abandoned the idea of laying down the burdens of office for "a period of rest and reflection." But his public statements continue to show a striking change in his political personality.

Nehru Abandons Idea Of Quitting For Rest, Reflection

His party is tainted by corruption, which forced the recent resignation of Finance Minister Krishnamachari, and by sectionalism, bigotry and inefficiency. "What will it profit us," he demanded of his colleagues, "if we win the elections but lose our souls and all that we stand for?"

His colleagues appear to have convinced Nehru that without him they would not even win the elections. In his zeal to make all the major decisions himself, he has left none of his subordinates in a position to command public support.

Throughout his term of office, he has worked tirelessly at current projects of political organization, language reform, conciliation of racial and religious disputes and a host of problems assailing his vast, immature republic.

Over and above his domestic duties, he has sought to give India an authoritative voice in international affairs, seeking the role of mediator between Russia and the West and bidding for the leadership of a "third force" of Asian and African powers.

At this level he has aroused the admiration of millions beyond his borders and the fury of others. Lord Pethick Lawrence, last British secretary of state for Indian affairs, described him as "one of the greatest human beings set up between one another."

But he has exasperated his critics abroad by his tendency towards lofty moralization in dealing with international disputes—one of the few characteristics he shares with State Secretary Dulles—and he has been accused of castigating the sins of the West with greater severity than those of the Communist world.

In his newly critical vein, Nehru has shown signs of redressing the balance, denouncing the obstructionism of the Communist party in India itself and condemning the Russians for attempting to enforce their policies on Yugoslavia and for the continual factional strife in the Soviet leadership.
